The Blair educational bill was discussed again in the Senate on Feb. 26. Senator Eustis supported the bill. Senator Ingalls opposed the bill as a Northern measure. He was no reason why Northern schools should be turned over to the Federal Government, and he was prepared to search for evidence on this demand. Amendment by Senator Harrison. He himself favored the first of these education bills ten or fifteen years ago, when it was proposed by Northern and proposed by Northern men. Now it was proposed by Southern men. Mr. Blair explained, votes were given for the Blair bill by Senators Swanson, Wilson, McPherson and Harris, on the ground that it was a bill for the relief of the South, and that it was a bill for the relief of the South. Senator Wilson said he had voted for the Blair bill because he was in favor of relieving the Southern States of the burden of supporting the Southern people. Senator Harris said he was in favor of the Blair bill because he was in favor of a general system of education. Senator Wilson said he was in favor of the Blair bill because he was in favor of a general system of education

THE JOURNAL.

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

The lumber lords, copper kings, iron dukes, coal counts, and other nobility, spend hundreds of thousands of dollars to keep up the tariff so that they can make the people pour a steady stream of golden wealth into their coffers for the sole purpose of enabling them to give the wage-workers "plenty of work and good wages." How kind that all is, isn't it? There is nothing in this wicked world so mutilmately beautiful as the efforts of these men to collect millions of money of the people so that they may bless the wage-workers with plenty of work and good wages!" Consumers of lumber are taxed $2 a thousand on lumber to enable the workmen who make the lumber to get "good wages." How these laborers do roll in wealth and luxury! Tom Barry will tell you all about how they live on the fat of the land, and how disinterested Gov. Alger, Senator Palmer, and the other lumbermen are all in this. They haven't been able to save more than $9,000,000 or $10,000,000 apiece out of it. What a blessed thing it is for the wage-workers to have a tariff on lumber.—Lansing Journal.

The latest dodge for swindling has come to our notice. A sanctimonious individual appears, as agent for a society organized for the purpose of placing high priced family bibles in every home in the country, without money and without price. Upon these terms he leaves a seventeen dollar family bible, he wants his horse fed, and a meal for himself, insisting on paying a fair cash price for the same, authorized by his bible-spreading society. He must also take a receipt of the money paid by him, and a receipt given. First piece of paper was used to shatter for a $100 promissory note, which it saves.—Albion Mirror.

Miss Cleveland is becoming quite famous for her bun seats. Her last and best was enjoyed by a number of others at the white house the other day. A gentleman from the west remarked to her "You hail from Buffalo, I believe, Miss Cleveland." "Yes," was the reply "we hail from Buffalo and we reign here."

President Cleveland has sent to congress a lenging message, denying the right of the senate to demand the unofficial papers and memoranda of reasons for removal of republican officials.

MISSING LINKS.

An old beggar of Stirling, Scotland, has the entire Bible by heart.

It is alleged by friends of Dr. Mary Walker that she has declined twelve offers of marriage.

Gossemil memorized 6,000 Latin verses, and daily recited 600 verses in different languages.

A young man who learned 10,000 words, could repeat them backward and forward without a mistake.

Which has control of the Straits of Belle Isle, and the country called Labrador is wiped off the map.

Nineteenths of the lawyers, three-fourths of the physicians, five-sixths of the poets and twenty-nine of the literary men use tobacco in some form.

"Deadwood" dog collars are the latest genuine folly. The dogs wear them in the morning, and then they are "shelled" and worn by the lady in the afternoon.

A recent earthquake in France affected only the clothing of the earth's surface, and was neither loud nor felt by men at work in the coal mines beneath.

Longfellow paid within a small amount of the total cost of production of his first volume of poems, and James Russell Lowell paid all the expenses of his first work.

"Dear Corbett's" insanity is pronounced incurable by an eminent specialist who has been for some time her assistant. One of her hallucinations is that Mormonism is and always shall be will soon be emperor of the entire world.

Julia Smith, the Connecticut woman who said she was refusing to pay taxes to a Government that would not let her do remarks to those who predicted disagreeness from her marriage five years ago, aged 85, that she is extremely happy.

The practice of writing political sentiments on walls, benches, and other available public spots is common in Paris. They used to be directed against aristocrats, but now the battle of denunciation is "Down with the clergy."

The Vicksburg newsboy, it is said, moves along the street, with a timid air, and almost whispers his request that you should invest in the morning paper. He steps off slowly as though he has plenty of time in which to cover his territory.

The men predominate in Mississippi, Vermont, Ohio, Kentucky, Delaware, Florida, West Virginia and Indiana, where the females are about 95 per cent of the males, and in Illinois, Wisconsin, Arkansas, Missouri and Iowa the percentage of females is from 90 to 95.

Blunt-pointed screws have been regarded as an invention of the present generation, but the Worcester (Mass.) Gazette has found half a dozen of them bearing every mark of age, and evidently manufactured before screws were made by machinery, in a piano made at London in 1765.

The Lancaster Examiner has discovered two Bibles dating back to the middle of the sixteenth century, but it is surpassed by the Harrisburg Leader which has found in the possession of Mr. Joseph Miller, of Fisherville, a copy of Luther's translation of the Scripture published in 1522.

Miss Swee, late Pension Agent at Chicago, writes in censure of some idle gossip: "I am not married—I never was married—I never expect to be. I am engaged, but it is strictly a business engagement that interests me, and until my new enterprise is partially and successfully established I shall have no time to think of matrimonial projects."

Somebody remembers that Morse once predicted that talking through a hundred miles of wire would become common, and that ocean steamers on a voyage would keep up communication electrically with the shore. The first prediction having come true, the second is hopefully regarded, though regarded as wild when made.

There is a negro boy in Marietta who can catch bees, yellow-jackets and humblebees the same as any one else would catch flies, and they do not sting him. He often catches a bee and puts it in his mouth and keeps it there for some time. When he spits it out it flies off. Live yellow jackets put under his clothes crawl around and out at other places without stinging him.

"The pressing necessity for the new universal language," writes a correspondent, "was practically felt the other day by three poor Arabs who wandered up and down Liverpool for days without being able to find any one to understand them. One of them could say the words 'African and ship,' but tired them on in vain at shipping offices and elsewhere, and finally when quite destituted to weeping laments at his failure to make himself understood by a newspaper. There was not even a Ho Quinsey at hand to quote Homer and give them cakes of opium which should end their distress. In the end a gentleman accosted them in their own language, and their troubles were at an end, but they would never have had a beginning if Volapuck had burst on the astonished world a little earlier."

In the great bank frauds trial at Vienna there was a sensation on the reading of a note written by Zimmer on the eve of his suicide, in which he said: "Kridge, with satanic power, has induced me to commit actions which bring pain and death on me, and which I committed involuntarily, being quite insane. God alone knows my innocence. I ask every one to pardon an unfortunate man who was led by this terrible sorcerer into fraud and misfortune." Kuffer attributes this letter to Sanner's excitement, and alleges that he had Zimmer's fullest confidence to the very last. Zimmer's widow states that her husband on the eve of the catastrophe spoke of Kuffer as his "Satan," and one of the messengers of the Kassenpeter Bank says to overheard Zimmer and Kuffer talk a week before the catastrophe of escaping to America or England.

INCIPIENT CONSUMPTION.—Coughs, colds, bronchitis, &c., are all the results of neglect or exposure, and must have prompt and active remedies to remove them. Croup and whooping cough cause great suffering because an effective remedy is not at hand. Why, then, leave yourself and children exposed to danger and death, when HAMILTON'S CURETA BALSAM will relieve all of these and prevent diseases, such as pneumonia, inflammation of lungs, and consumption. All lung difficulties are removed by this remedy. Price 25 and 50 cts. per bottle.

SOME DAY.

BY MARY C. SCHUYLER.

Some day my cheek shall lose its bloom,
The flower my garden prizes most,
And yield the shades and quietude alone
My tired spirit crave;
Down, down the dim descent of years,
Of rough wearing cares and bruising tears,
With heart half beating from its fears,
I'll send my way.

Some day my head shall dismane grow,
My hair turn white as winter snow,
My voice grow tremulous, and low
My mind flow;
But still I'll be a gold I'll tread,
And musing, pensive, my cherished dead,
The hopes and joys I have lost
So far away.

But oh! some day when life slopes down
To the night shadows dim and brown,
I hope to see the morn
Waiting for me,
Then robed in calm content I'll lie,
With folded hands and feathers eyes,
And yield my breath without a sigh,
Glad to be free.

THE MOROCCO PURSE.

BY C. LEON MEREDITH.

Twice a year, from beyond the Mississippi, I visit the metropolis of the West for the purchase of goods.

Knowing Chicago to be a great, wicked city, I have always been on my guard for sharpers, especially when carrying much money, but my watchfulness failed at one time to save me from a very unpleasant adventure, the experience, however, terminating most favorably.

The event took place two years ago.

Late one afternoon, while on my return from the wholesale house of Marshall Field & Co. to my hotel, I was detained for a minute at the corner of Clark and Madison streets by a clique of cars and vehicles.

As I stood watching for an opportunity to wave over, I noticed a tall, gaunt man gazing upon me intently. A fearful scowl was upon his face, and the bony fingers were clenched firmly into the palms of his white hands.

I was wondering what it could mean, when suddenly a change came.

The strange-looking man came quickly to my side, the hard look left his features, and a soft smile took its place. A well-filled morocco purse was suddenly slipped into my hand and the man said hurriedly:

"That's yours, Thompson. I forgive you; keep it."

Before I had time to open my lips in protest, before I could tell him that my name was not Thompson, the fellow had darted away, mingled with the crowd, and was lost to view.

I was perplexed.

My first thought was that a followed pick-pocket had forced the purse into my hand to shield himself, and that I would soon be arrested as a confederate.

Glancing about me I discovered no one watching. All seemed to have individual affairs to attend to, and not a policeman was in sight.

Still holding the fat, soft purse exposed in my hand, the hotel was reached.

An hour spent in my room studying over the affair did no sort of good. The simple facts existed, that was all, and reflection on my strange adventure afforded no least satisfactory solution to the problem.

That the purse had been stolen there was no doubt. And why it had been given to me, or why the thief should wish to forgive Thompson and give the article to him, of course I could not divine.

After half an hour's deliberation, a resolution was formed to put the owner of the pocket-book. I could give it into the care of the hotel-keeper and advertise.

As I reached the staircase at the end of the long hall, a new idea came to me, and I hastened back to my room.

I decided to examine the contents of the purse before letting it go out of my possession, make a memorandum of what it contained, then I could tell if accurately described by any applicant, or if tampered with while out of my hands.

The purse contained only a few dollars in money, but, mercy! what a multitude of other articles!

There were bits of sample silks, a glove hook, recipes for frosted cake, a little plain ring, a few small pearls, lots of ribbon, and several calling-cards.

The purse certainly belonged to a woman.

The cards were all white, and bore in fine script the name of Lena Sathern.

The plan of finding the owner was changed again.

I would write to Lena Sathern, general delivery, Chicago, and await the result.

A letter was accordingly placed in the possession of the hotel-clerk. It was brief, a simple statement that I was in possession of a purse which contained cards bearing her name.

The day following when I came in for dinner the hotel clerk told me that a lady had been waiting for some time to see me in the parlor.

Entering the room but one person was to be seen.

A lady sat upon a seat near the window—a young lady of remarkable beauty.

As the light of intelligence streamed through the half-contained casement, it fell upon my ideal of a supposed lovely face.

So sweet and so bright was it that I stood and gazed upon her nobly before speaking.

She evidently noticed my staring and boldness, for she turned away for a moment and then arose.

"Are you the gentleman who wrote this line to me?" she asked, extending the letter of the evening before.

I bowed my answer.

"I will describe the purse," she said, quietly, and proceeded to do so very accurately.

I handed her the fat little morocco purse, and opening it with nimble fingers she said, sweetly:

"I shall be very glad to reward you, kind sir, for—"

"Nothing of the kind," I returned. "I have sufficient means for all my needs, and it gives me great pleasure to place in your hands the article that came into my possession in a very strange manner."

She started a little, then composed herself, and without a question moved toward the door.

"You will accept my thanks?" she said, so softly and musically that I could hardly frame words for reply.

During the very brief minutes that she had been before me I had treated my self to supreme loveliness, and I did not wish the spell broken so suddenly.

"Will you tell me one thing before you go?" I asked, holding up my hand as if to detain her. "Will you let me know in what manner the little purse left your possession? It was forced interest lured by a very strange personage, a middle-aged, war-looking fellow, who called me Thompson, and saying he forgave me, dashed away. I thought him a pickpocket; were my suspicions correct?"

"No! no!" she answered, a painful smile crossing her angelic face. "There was no crime in it, and the exercise of no reason. The Thompson is an imaginary man and the one who would bestow the gift not in his right mind. I know no more."

She bowed as she passed out, and turned her lovelyingly beautiful eyes full upon my face.

I watched the tall, graceful figure as it swept through the hall, and then turned reflectively to my room.

"You are a great case," I said to myself, while pacing up and down my apartment. "Thirty years of age and never but once before saw a face that touched the heart."

That other face was as sweet as this, and made a boy's heart.

More than a decade of years before this event I had met at St. Paul a bright, cheery girl of sixteen, and we both had our young hearts.

For two blissful months we walked, talked, rested, and gathered all there together.

I wove garlands of the sweetest praise-lessons and heaped them as a crown upon the queenly head of the brown-haired and blue-eyed Allie Floyd, and she told me so tenderly of her mother's love that I blessed my bliss was so fast forever.

But the dream was soon to be broken and a life shadow fall.

Suddenly I was called down the river to attend her in mother of business.

Promising Allie a quick return, I left the girl at the landing as the steamer swept out into the current and away.

My absence from St. Paul was prolonged nine weeks. But I was at the appointed tide of the time I did not hear from my little friend, and when I did go up with my news the Floyd family had left for their New England home.

The course of the sudden departure was the illness of Allie.

After a month's loneliness I wrote a letter to the place which was remembered as the girl's home. To this no reply came.

Four more weeks passed, and I wrote the partner of Mr. Floyd, and he in due time proposed to tell the girl, owing to the death of her daughter and the illness of her mother, Mr. and Mrs. Floyd had gone to Europe.

This information struck me like a thunderbolt; it crushed my spirits, and nearly broke my young heart.

Years that day until the one that I met Lena Sathern a female face had never been seen that attracted particular interest.

This woman I had met in the hallway back the height, wavy face of my Allie, and received my young, pure love.

I loved this Lena Sathern with all the enthusiasm of my young soul.

During the whole afternoon and night that followed I thought of nothing, dreamed of nothing, but the sweet one who had come to me with the bright angelic face of my lovelish idol.

One thing I firmly resolved. I had neglected to ask the lady for her residence, street and number.

I would have made some excuse for calling upon her had I obtained the information.

Waiting could not be awarded. The letter was addressed as before, but no answer came.

I had simply asked for an interview, claiming that certain suspicions I entertained respecting the man who gave me the purse needed settlement or refutation, and I hinted that I might see her that I could be of service to her.

Picking up the paper again I noticed that the date of one issue, marked in pencil, was in force.

Then I felt certain it had come from the window.

Only a few weeks passed before my season of alternate hope and fear came to an end.

A letter came, bearing the same delicate hand, into my soul, and near my little Allie Floyd is coming to me forever.—Chicago Ledger.

The Chicken Business.

It does feel the touch how closely great men are watched.

Gen. Grant's chicken business has possessed itself of the knowledge that I never knew earlier, and the result is that I am now in possession of a very comprehensive and exceedingly valuable information.

The thought that Lena Sathern belonged to any one else had never entered my self-sufficiency head

Around the County.

The County Seat.

East Jordan, March 1, 1886.

EDITOR JOURNAL. Your publication of Mr. Loveday's letter encourages us to hope that you will also publish what I am about to write in answer to another of the Sentinel's ill-natured dings which appeared in the last issue of that sheet, whose editor seems to think that if he misrepresents and abuses East Jordan and its people he is talking upon the county seat question, and who says we must not resent his abuse, or, if we do, he'll puff us all the more. Now, perhaps it may be as well for the Sentinel man to know that we are not dogs, or at least not that kind of dog commonly called cur, and that we have borne this kind of treatment without any attempt at retaliation about as long as we intend to. Of course we perfectly well understand that the Sentinel does not represent the better sentiment of Charlevoix upon this question, and we know there are a few friends there who seem to think we ought not to notice what it says, simply because it comes from the erratic pen of its chief editor. But that chief says that he is "considered a potent factor in the county seat fight." That if we cease to take his paper "he will make the picnic all the warmer for us." That he has enlisted for the war and proposes to make it as lively as he can. (He probably means the war on us.) That he is "entrenched behind a just cause," although he says not a word to show its justice. And last of all, he tries to kill us off with these big words: "furiosum a occelerando." (The italics are his.) There is an old saying that "A man may as well be killed by a common shot as scared to death." Now these big words of the great editor do positively scare us nosebucks almost to death, and I therefore beg him, whatever other favor he may refuse us, to at least grant us the favor of such simple language as we simpletons can understand. He tells us, too, that "there are other localities in Charlevoix county besides South Arm township," and bids us hear it in mind. For this valuable information and sage advice we do thank him, and desire to make this small return in kind: There is, for instance, in our town, another news paper in Charlevoix, "and don't you forget it."

What it is that has turned the Sentinel's old-time sweetness toward us into such bitter gall, you who live nearer to him than we do may understand; we do not. In past years the most friendly relations have existed between South Arm, East Jordan, and Charlevoix, and we have reason to believe that a very large proportion of the good people of Charlevoix still entertain toward us the best of feeling, notwithstanding the disturbing immedose of the Sentinel. We hope this good feeling will continue with those with whom it has been constant, and be revived in those who from any cause have allowed it to cool. Surely it is for the best interests of all concerned that it should be so. No one, we think, will deny this. It follows, then, that the Sentinel should argue the county seat question with decency instead of treating us every now and again to a botch-potch of scurrility; that the subject should be examined upon its merits, instead of subjecting the people of this village and region to base insinuations. This course it does not seem disposed to take; indeed, it appears to be in the condition of the lawyer who submitted his brief to eminent counsel for advice, who, after examination, wrote upon it: "No case, but abuse the opposite lawyer."

The people of this county thought it last spring, by a very large majority, to designate this village as the place in which the public business of the county should be transacted. In consequence of that the township of South Arm has had built at an expense of several thousand dollars, good offices and a good hall and jail, in which such business can be transacted; all of which is entirely free of cost to the county, and will continue to be. Perhaps it is because of this that Mr. Smith chooses to consider us in the position of the lawyer who had the best side of the case. But why he should consider himself the other fellow, and abuse us accordingly, is past our comprehension. We should like to know why, and doubtless a majority of the voters of the county would like to know.

From the Enterprise.

Mrs. Estelle, of Charlevoix, is here, visiting her father, Samuel A. Sinclair.

Six loads of hay were seen at one time on the ice near Ellsworth bound for East Jordan.

Mrs. Chas. Swallow and son, of Charlevoix, was the guest of mine host Blair and wife over Sunday.

The new town hall of East Jordan, which has just been accepted by the township board, is pronounced a success in every particular, being neat, handsome and convenient. The cost was $4,300.—News.

Frank Durgis, who was released on bail at the last term of court, and who was to have been tried at this term as accomplice in the murder of an Indian in August last, failed to appear. The other two, Graham and Moore, are here, but as yet nothing has been done.

The citizens of Charlevoix are to be congratulated on their new flouring mill. It is capable of turning out 100 barrels of flour per day. Now, as we have a mill in the county that will turn out as good flour as any in the state, we deem it the duty of every merchant in the county to buy their flour of this mill. By so doing our home industries are made prosperous, and at the same time our county is brought into more prominent notice as a progressive one.

Burgess.

Moses Cooper hauled to Oyster Bay, during the month of February, 5,000 ties and posts.

E. H. Burgess is about to put a force of men to work getting out ties and posts, and is putting up a boarding house in the swamp.

According to report, Messrs. Whitford and Crane have their mill pretty well stocked with logs.

A young lady, who formerly lived in Hayes, but who has lived in Charlevoix for the past two years, passed through here on her wedding trip on Monday. We did not learn the name of the happy man, but join with the multitude of friends in wishing them many years of happy wedded life.

The family of John Newstead is under bereavement, death having taken the infant son.

Mrs. Frank Kane, who has been in feeble health for some time past, is slowly recovering, under the skillful treatment of Dr. Lewis.

The Rev. J. Crane preached at Maple Grove school house last Sabbath, and preaches there again in four weeks.

Some of our prominent farmers were busy hauling their grain to the North Star mill at Charlevoix, last week.

Barnard.

Robert Matchett started for Canada Saturday, to visit his father.

Miss Maggie Bennett closed a successful term of school here last Saturday.

Mr. Thorp's youngest daughter is recovering from a severe attack of inflamation of the lungs.

William Clark is hauling posts and ties to Charlevoix.

There will be no preaching here next Sunday, on account of quarterly meeting at Norwood.

Marsh was ushered in as a meek but shivering lamb.

ANCIENT HISTORY IN MASSACHUSETTS.

We passed Mattock Hill, where once the famous mansion of Oliver, the Tory judge, stood in all its glory of Gothic arch and English timber, with the tusks sent from Devonshire to Madame Oliver coloring its portico. The Olivers were a famous family at that time. The judge was known to be a stanch and loyal servant of the English king, and he entertained right royally in the old mansion on Mattock Hill. There was a banqueting hall said to be well worth the name. An old family servant who lived for into this century used to tell of its shining floor and oaken seats, and the glitter of its wax lights. The chairs were of English oak, with crowns carved upon them; the table, a splendid piece of the same wood, with feet like claws grasping a ball. So noted were Madam Oliver's gatherings that the leading ladies in the land thought it no hardship to come thirty miles to attend one. Innumerable are the stories told of the guests at those rollicksome banquets. Of one beauty from Boston it is said that for two nights previous to a visit at the Olivers', she slept with her hands tied above her head to widen them, and another colonial belle slept upright in an arm-chair instead of taking her beauty-sleep, that her coiffure might be disturbed, the hair-dresser having been compelled to do his work overnight. Thither, riding on a pillion or in a chariot, came frequently a charming Miss Dolly Nash, for whose favor so many suitors sighed vainly, and who dispensed her smiles judiciously, and taste the honor of a dance almost like a royal gift. Miss Dolly was a wit as well as a beauty, and had been at the English court six months, so that her "rout" was considered perfect. She wore the newest fashions of 1769, and people who might have been her grandfather not forbid paint and powder, the sparkle of her eyes and the light of her smile were said to be so entrancing that two English officers fought a duel over the question as to which one had received the softest glance of the evening.

At Oliver House charming Mistress Nash was always fee out by the host, and as the floor of the ball-room was polished for its waxen polish (three maids having charge of it), we can fancy that the old judge, a trifle gouty, and not very keen in his vision, had to be very careful how he stepped, for to blunder, with Miss Dolly's dainty hand in his, would have been unpardonable indeed. We can fancy the scene very readily: the hoops and towering coiffures of the fine dames of Massachusetts, the wigs and satin ruffles of the sterner sex, the wax lights, the darkly shining floor, and the figure of the judge leading forth lovely Dolly. Imagine how every eye was turned upon them; even those gallants, who scraped away at the upper end of the room, were not insensible to so much feminine charm, and down upon the scene comes the shout of a horseman who had ridden from Boston, and was galloping up Mattock Hill, swinging his hat and shouting loudly, "Long life to the royal heir of Great Britain!" for that day a step had brought the news of the birth of George the Fourth.

As we went down the hill we seemed to have a vision of that glowing period, and then to see the lights at Oliver House go out, the fair faces and splendid figures vanish, the fiddlers, sighs, the love-making, and the withering of that gallant day die away forever.

When the revolution broke out, Judge Oliver did not hesitate to avow his fury principles, which so enraged the people of Middlesex that they determined to set fire to his stately dwelling. Some one—whom it is not known—conveyed the news secretly to the judge, who was in Boston, and he rode out under cover of the night, and entering his own house like a thief, stole into the great dancing hall and the library, and carried away with him whatever of papers and money and jewels he could secrete about his person. He was only just in time.

Early the next morning a mob came up the hill, headed by a portly young carpenter, and the fine mansion was ransacked and burned to the ground, the judge and his immediate family escaping to England. While there it was said that although he frequently entertained American guests, he never referred in any way to his life among the colonists.—Lucy C. Lillie, in Harper's Magazine for October.

The Conversation Stopped There.

A couple of gentlemen stood on Vine street talking about one thing or another when a beggar made a plea for alms, showing that his right hand was gone as an inducement to contribute. One of the gentlemen gave the leper a dime, but the other refused to ante up.

"How did you lose your hand?" the beggar was asked.

"I was coupling cars, and got my hand so badly mashed that I had to have it cut off, sir."

"Oh, no, you didn't do anything of the kind," said the gentleman who had declined to give the beggar any money.

"How do you know I didn't lose it there?" impudently retorted the tramp.

"Yes, I was there," replied the gentleman. "Your hand was blown off while you were trying to steal a watch from my pocket, and I am the very one that did it. The only mistake I made was in shooting at your hand instead of your heart."

The beggar did not stop to parley, but sneaked off with celerity.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

The question involved the right of the State to tax the property of the company, whose cars pass through the State. The decision sustained that of the lower courts, which had been in favor of the Pullman Company.

Bills are pending in both branches of Congress to increase the rate of postage on fourth-class matter from 1 to 2 cents per pound. The reason is that the deficit in the Postoffice Department for 1885 was $10,500,000 and the deficit for the current year is estimated at $9,000,000.

President Cleveland has nominated General Alfred H. Terry to the Major-Generalship made vacant by the death of General Hancock. General Terry was born in Hartford, Conn., November 10, 1827, was graduated from West Point in January, 1852, and was loud in the bar. He was serving as Colonel of the 7th regiment of the Connecticut militia at the outbreak of the rebellion, and left it to the field. After the battle of Bull Run he returned to Connecticut, organized the 5th Connecticut Volunteers, and joined Sherman's forces in the command. Col. Terry was made a Brigadier on March 21, 1862. He participated in many of the most noted river battles, and on Jan. 15, 1865, became commander of the 1st division, 24th corps, and, sided by Porter's fleet, carried by assault Fort Fisher, ending the Confederate stronghold, at Cape Fear River. He was brevetted a Brigadier General of the regular army, and voted the thanks of Congress for this service. He was made a full Brigadier General of the United States army, and brevetted conduct in the capture of Wilmington, N. C. The close of the war in 1865 found him in command of the Department of Virginia, and during the early stages of reconstruction in Virginia he performed valuable service. Since the war he has held important commands in the South and in the Northwest, and has gained a wide reputation as an able soldier.

POLITICAL.

The Judiciary Committee of the United States Senate will make an adverse report on the nomination of Zachariah Montgomery, of California, as Assistant Attorney General, on account of his hostility to the public school system.

The Ohio Supreme Court rendered judgment of ouster in the quo warranto cases against the Cincinnati Police Commission, and ordered in one Police Superintendent Hilmer, who was placed for one year. The action of the Governor in removing the Commissioners is thus sustained.

A Washington dispatch states that the Senate Military Committee "has agreed on the House bill for the relief of Fitz-John Porter. Senators Cameron and Sewell were the Republicans in favor of the bill. There will be a majority and a unanimous report. The former will probably be prepared by Senator Sewell and the latter by Senator Logan. The bill will be reported from the Senate, as Senators Sewell, Hoar, Cameron, Jones of Nevada, Saulsbury and Pike will vote with the Democrats in its support."

The President has nominated Henry Albert Johnson, of the Interior of Columbia, to be Consul at Venice; Mortimer A. Turner, of Arkansas, to be Consul at St. Thomas; and Commodore William T. Truxton to be a Rear Admiral.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The deposits in the Government savings banks of Canada during January were $595,283. The amount standing to the credit of patrons is $19,000,000.

A woman was thrown from a train between Erie and Dunkirk, while passing from the baggage car to the smoker. She received a severe gash in the left temple.

A skating rink and three other structures at Troy, N. Y., were burned, taking valuable injuring several persons, the shall of one man being crushed. The financial loss is $40,000. A business block at Hoosick Falls, owned by clothing firms, was partially gutted, the loss reaching $50,000.

John Swinton believes that the most deadly blow yet given to King Alcohol is the rule of the Knights of Labor excluding liquor-sellers and saloon-keepers from membership. He is doing more, he says, "to put an end to drunkenness and to keep the laboring man under the ban than all the laws of Maine and all the speeches of Beecher ever did."

The Canadian Pacific Railway depot at Winnipeg was destroyed by fire. The loss is approximate $175,000.

A snowstorm in the Province of Quebec has continued four days, and several passenger and freight trains were buried out of sight. In some of the cuttings the snow was eighteen feet in depth for a distance of half a mile. Three men were found frozen to death in the streets of New York the other morning.

The Argentine Republic and Uruguay are on the verge of a war. The Argentine Congress voted a loan of $11,000,000 for the purchase of ironclads, without any provision for paying the interest on the loan. The Uruguayan government has asked the Congress to suspend the payment of the interest on its foreign debt, and the Congress has been specially convened to consider the question. The Congress has also before it a proposition to increase the duties on imports, which is opposed by the Argentine Minister, who has left for home.

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

The Ways and Means Committee heard arguments against the Morrison bill from Chairman Jones and Secretary Cope, of the American Iron and Steel Association. A sub-committee listened to arguments from Wisconsin, Connecticut, and New York lumbermen, who asked that a duty of 75 cents be placed on imported sawed lumber and a duty of $1 a pound on imported shingle bolts.

The House Claims Committee has agreed favorably to the Senate bill to authorize the payment of claims for horses lost in the late war. The Senate bill provides that the claims now pending in the Court of Claims, which have been there for more than ten years, shall be referred to the Court of Claims. The estimated cost of the proposed legislation is about $[illegible].

The New Jersey Supreme Court affirmed the action of the lower court in refusing to issue a writ of habeas corpus to Daniel S. Dalton, convicted and imprisoned for not paying the full amount of his prosecutor's costs.

In the Kentucky House Robert G. Stone introduced a resolution that Mahlon A. Daniel, who walked to Washington from his home in Kentucky, be allowed his salary, and mileage, and be given the position of doorkeeper of the House, which position he now fills. The resolution was adopted without division. The Appropriation Committee, to which the resolution reported the immediate passage of the bill, and the House, by a vote of 127 to 11, passed the bill, which provides for the payment of Daniel's salary and mileage, and directs the Speaker to appoint the man to the place.

Judge Hunter, of Newark, Ohio, has sentenced R. J. Riding to be hanged on the 30th inst., for the murder of John Sampson.

Prof. Ginsburg Hourlicks has been dismissed from the Long Island University by the trustees, on the ground that he has been engaging discussions among the faculty.

Thomas Cleveland has been jailed at Memphis, Mich., for a month from August upon Myron J. Vanzant, a school teacher, in the presence of a room full of people. The rules were: "Vanzant, you are a liar and a coward." Vanzant, the teacher, thought that the first test of the rules would be a fight, but Cleveland, who is established in manhood, and a good-natured lad, has contented himself by the decisions of the court, which, in addition to the month's jail delivery, assessed a fine of $100 and costs, which, with the costs of the case, will amount to about $200. Cleveland is popular in the community, and the sentiment of the people is that the punishment is severe.

The Senate Committee on Public Lands has agreed to report favorably the bill for the relief of the Northern Pacific Railroad, with amendments.

The Senate Committee on Pensions has agreed to report favorably the Dingley bill, with amendment.

The House Committee on Postoffices and Post Roads unanimously agreed to report adversely all bills before it for the purchase or construction of telegraph lines by the Government.

In the Supreme Court of the United States the case of the State of Tennessee against the Pullman Car Company was decided favorably for the latter. The question involved the right of the State to tax the property of the company, whose cars pass through the State. The decision sustained that of the lower courts, which had been in favor of the Pullman Company.

CHARLEVOIX, - MICHIGAN

The County Seat Question.

Three weeks from next Monday the voters of Charlevoix county will decide whether they want the county seat removed to Boyne City, the geographical center territory alone considered, or whether they will have it placed ultimately near the center of population and business. If the latter, then will vote against removal this strong leaning it whose it is an old is relative commercial importance of the four principal towns on Pine Lake and the Arm is established. From present indications the future center of business and population is likely to be located nearer to Ironton than any point farther east; and Charlevoix will vote to put the county seat there if given a chance; but she will not be likely to have a chance if it is removed to Boyne this spring. Charlevoix voted against removing to East Jordan, and she will vote to take it away when she finds herself benefited either in distance or improved transportation. To go to Boyne now would be a gain of neither. But if by an adverse vote this spring she can compel another submission by the board of supervisors to place it at Ironton, she will gain in both items, and will vote to put it there.

A glance at the table of population will show that the greatest growth has been in the towns on the lake. In the natural course of business this must continue, and consequently a greater number of people are benefited if the county offices are located so as to equalize the distances necessarily traveled by those having the most business with those offices. If this question can be intelligently decided now, let the whole controversy be settled now; but if the growth of certain sections in the immediate future is likely to change the conditions, it is better to wait a year or two to give a chance for development.

Ironton is practically a middle-ground between the three other principal villages which have a large business with the county offices, and the location there will equally accommodate all. But if it is desired a year hence that Boyne City should be the most populous village, it is desired a year hence that it should be the county seat there if given a chance; but she will not be likely to have a chance if it is removed to Boyne this spring. Charlevoix voted against removing to East Jordan, and she will vote to take it away when she finds herself benefited either in distance or improved transportation. The Smithson Cottage.

The work on J. S. Smithson's beautiful cottage is now completed. It being the finest cottage on either resort, a somewhat extended description will be of interest to our readers.

The cottage is situated on the western extremity of the Chicago resort, upon the point of the terrace nearest to Round lake, which it fronts upon and overlooks. The building itself is many angled and many gabled, a porch on every side, an oriel window on the south-east and a tower and balcony on the south west.

Entering from the south, or front, and passing the vestibule, we find ourselves in a spacious sitting room, ceiled throughout with ash, wainscoting in birch, with an artistic centre piece over the hanging lamp. As we enter, we face the open grate, which has a superb carved mantle containing the Smithson crest, which consists of a squirrel sitting in characteristic position upon its haunches, in the center, the whole encircled by a leather garlic, upon which is inscribed the motto: "Either thou, or I should die."

Three rooms open off from this sitting room, besides the staircase. The sliding doors of the left, open into the parlor, a many angled room under the tower. This one all except the sitting room is finished in hard plaster, with birch casings and base.

Back of the parlor, through sliding doors we enter the dining room, adjoining which it is very little kitchen. In this dining room, is another beautiful grate and mantle, finished in ash.

The third room opening off from the sitting room is the family bedroom, a model of convenience. The staircase, just at the right as we enter the sitting room is decidedly unique and ornamental, finished in birch and ash. Rising three or four steps to the level of the oriel window, we have a landing upon which a speaker could stand and address visible audiences in the four rooms just described. From this landing we pass by several steps to the hall above, off from which opens four large rooms and a bath room. From these rooms views of the country can be had in all directions, surpassed only by the same views from the tower above. Here the steamers on Lake Michigan, the yachts on Pine Lake, and the promontories of the Kalamazoo resort are plainly visible.

Mr. Smithson has shown fine taste both in the selection of site and the style of building erected thereon.

The building contract was awarded to Messrs. Heath & Francis, of Charlevoix, and these gentlemen have had every facility, and spared no pains in making every part of their work above criticism.

The Chicago Daily News

Was the Largest Daily Circulation in America.

Its issue for the year 1884 averaged 125,178 copies daily, and it is now regularly printing over 170,000 papers a day.

The magnificent this unequaled circulation is best appreciated when it is seen that it exceeds the circulations of all other Chicago dailies combined. Taking from the latest sworn statements, the circulations of Tribune, Inter-Ocean, Times, Herald, Journal, Staats Zeitung, Herold, Arbeiter Zeitung, Ordnung, Freie Presse, Fanfulla, and Skandinavisk Tidende, and adding the estimated circulations of the Chicago Daily News, the following diagram correctly illustrates their relative positions as to extent of circulation.

From these figures it appears that the circulation of THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS exceeds the combined circulations of all the other Chicago dailies by 19,873 copies daily. The reasons for this phenomenal success are obvious:

THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS is a complete newspaper for all the results of the best types of American journalism.

It is a member of the Associated Press, and is the only 2 cent paper in the West that possesses this first essential to a complete news service. In addition, it has its own private wire for issue from the Western Union Telegraph Company, and its Chicago office with New York and Washington, at both of which points it has its own news bureaus. THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS prints all the news.

It is an independent paper. It recognizes the utility of parties as a means for the accomplishment of proper ends, but it devotes its good service to party as it utilizes the former

THE HOMESTEAD.

BY JOHN BURNHAM WHITTIER.

Against the wooded hills it stands,
Object of a dead hope, staring through
Its broken lights on wasted lands
Where children harvests grew.

Unplowed, unsown, by scythe unshorn,
The poor, forsaken farm sinks the,
Only the wind-vane's rusty pulse can
And pale grass tremble of rye.

Of beautiful herb and flower forlorn,
The garden plot to house-leek keeps;
Trench weeds and tangle, only left
The snake, its haunt, creeps.

A blue spray, once blossom-hid,
Sways back before the empty rooms;
Beside the rotting porch a set
Pallidly red rose blooms.

He treads, in rank and dust of decay,
Of floor-boards ripped by prowling swine,
And in the broken chimney's mouth
His web the spider weaves.

The leaning barn, about to fall,
Resounds no more to housing cows;
No cellar low in yard or stall,
No feeder beats his shoulder.

So sad, so dead! It seems almost
Some kindly presence must give its sign;
That down yon shadowy lane some ghost
Might drive his spectral kine!

O house, or cottage and barn!
For all thy memories do with thee?
Were any well, some any born,
Beneath this low roofless?

Where are the wall of forest limbs,
And let the wind-sown thoughts?
What dust wife and the tattered mouse
By the proof-sheet dies?

O? rustic incess hither come?
Hold, swaying back and forth
Thy cradle, and the sweet song and hum,
Make light their last sad mirth?

Did child feet patter on the floor?
Did laughter frolic in the snow?
Did gray age, in her chair by the door,
Sadly, nothing to and fro?

The mourning book, the sighing breeze,
The pine's slow whisper, can not tell;
Low sunset's smile, the clock-loud trees
Keep the house secrets well.

Come, unfurnished, to finally leave
Of what for all was home! Let thrive,
Neglected flower and weed, the grief
Must leave no emptier house.

O wanderers from ancestral sill,
Leave look on mill and shuttering store;
Grid up your lane for startled hill,
And build the home elsewhere!

Found back to hallowed slopes,
And fingered fain, and ground just thine;
Hearths are blown over hill and copse
Strewn with black birch and pine.

What matter if the gables are small
Thatch's essential wants are simple?
Your forefathers little guess you all
That site wealth can buy.

All that the many-dollared grave,
The ambitious slaves of change and mart,
Lawns, trees, fresh air, and flowers, you have,
Note fear for lack of art.

Your own sole masters, freedom-stilled,
With none to bid you pay rent,
Till the old fields your fathers tilled,
As many years they!

With shift that spares your toiling hands,
Any change and that science brings,
Have ye not, in your own lands,
Half reign thereon as kings?

The Syringa Bush

BY PAUL PASTNOR.

Mr. Magiunis was not afraid of ghosts. He never had been—he never would be. If he had said so once he had said so five hundred times, perhaps more. It was one of the supreme satisfactions of his life to laugh at the women folks and the children when they talked about ghosts. "Pooh, pooh, my dears!" he would cry. "The idea of being afraid of what doesn't exist! afraid of nothing! I do have, it makes me tired!" Mr. Magiunis fully sympathized with the recently published views of Mr. Walt Whitman on the subject of American slang. It sometimes used to make Mr. Magiunis turn fairly purple in the face with laughing to hear how the twelve, sorrow girls came in all of a shiver in the evening after seeing Mr. Magiunis' own last week's mud-etchers mostly wasting upon the clothes-line. It was always with a fiendish delight that the worthy man beheld a white-cow or an old spectral and decrepit milk-white horse abroad in the golden crestide, for he knew that in a very short time some lady—presumably an old maid or a schoolma'am, or a fat cook with a dozen bundles under her arm, would be frightened out of their false teeth. Such was Fletcher Magiunis—a disbeliever in things supernatural; a little, pudgy, lay-witshowed, prosaic, short-breathed, every-day grocer, who never sanded his sugar because he fully believed that somebody else had attended to that little matter before him.

Now it happened in the regular course of events that winter approached, with its usual brackly of frosts and intimes and the arrival of the man with the five-inch stove-pipe elbow under his arm. Mr. Magiunis, as usual, resurrected his ulster, and crowded the same old chestnut, as he put the blue-nosed ice man delivering his last blocks of crystal comfort at the back door. Mrs. Magiunis began to gather in her choice plants, knowing meanwhile that she had neglected this important domestic duty until the complexion of her nose, tweaked by the remorseless fingers of Jack Frost, must surely attract the attention of passers by. One delicate syringa bush (Magiunis called it syringa bush, but then Magiunis had no eye for poetry, no olfactory organ capable of aesthetic titillation) she debated long ever, undecided whether to remove it, take out all to the cellar, or venture to intrust it to the chilly embrace of winter. Finally she decided to give it a chance, fashionable, corn-colored ulster of straw, which Magiunis should purchase for her, and some competent son of Erin out and fit to suit the requirements of the bush. But meanwhile a sharp night threatened; Magiunis had gone to the city, to be absent "rather later than usual," he said, as it was "lodge night," and perhaps some overtaxing were provided for at the precious syringa would probably freeze. So Mrs. Magiunis went into the house and got on a chair of hers and a sheet. It was quite dark, but Mrs. Magiunis laughed as she spread out the half-cut-like garment and slipped it over the bush, thinking what if anybody should see her now! Then she wrapped the sheet, fold on fold, around the bush, and fastened it with that woman's sole weapon, a pin.

It was considerably "small" in the morning when Magiunis got away from the "lodge." He felt queer. The morning air of the early morning cut to his very marrow. He shivered, actually trembled—something he had not done for twenty-three years, although he was a married man. Somehow, his head seemed to be bursting. He grabbed his hat on, and with the greatest difficulty discovered the connection between his knee and the lightning band and tilted the hat upon the back of his head. How strangely the stars looked! How the ground seemed to glide forward and backward beneath his feet. He stared dazedly in the direction of home, every now and then stopping to allow the shifting earth time to subside, then, clasping the unfortunated elder feeble with both hands, lo, staggered on again.

Fletcher Magiunis was drunk—a little. Not so drunk that he didn't realize it himself, but just drunk enough to be somewhat dazed and apprehensive and oblique of vision. He had no difficulty in finding his way home, but the way seemed long and strangely full of terrors. He shook like a leaf as he passed the low iron fence of the cemetery, and once, as the wind passed with a long, rustling sound through a pile of leaves, he started to run and his tripping shoe catching him between the legs, tripped him squarely upon all fours and brought him face to face with a ghostly gravestone close against the fence.

The cold sweat stood on Mr. Magiunis' brow when he emerged into the open air. He stopped for a moment and rubbed his hands across his eyes. Good heavens, what was that nodding back and forth in the rising wind? Mr. Magiunis leant quite a great thump, and his hair wiggled about under his hat till it nearly pushed it off. He advanced a step—then retreated two. It surely was a ghost. It stood from side to side like a pawn in some mental agony. Magiunis was sure that he heard a low moan escape his lips, and saw it wring its clumsy hands.

And then a fierce gust of wind swept around the house. The figure seemed to shake itself and expand. Another gust—and heroes! with an awful rushing and a clap that shook every bone in Magiunis' body. The closed left its moorings and floated swiftly down the shadowy lips, and Magiunis fell back more dead than alive, while the trailing garments of the ghost passed over him and swept away in the darkness.

* * *

Mrs. Magiunis and the fat cook dragged Magiunis into the house. He was so badly scared that he could not speak an audible word for ten minutes, then he opened his white lips and groaned:

"Where is the ghost?" If he had asked to see an ancient great-grandfather Mr. Magiunis could not have been more taken aback. The idea of Magiunis admitting the existence of a ghost! by gentle degrees he told of his encounter from behind the lurcoming tale. At the story of the ghost in the yard the cook fell to her knees. As Magiunis in his rental located the specter, a smile began to creep from the corners of his good lady's mouth. When the ghost left its lonely and gloomy abode, it was grimed. When he descended the flap, and the rustle, and the trailing garments, she touched outright.

Magiunis in his turn was amazed. Mrs. Magiunis laughing at a ghost—the idea! He charged her with sonnet-unconsciousness. Her reply was long and to the point:

"Magiunis, you are a fool!"

Magiunis was in a fix. He said:

"That ghost you saw was the syringa bush, done up in a——"

"And the bushing garments?"

"The sheet blown off by the wind."

Magiunis has bought his wife a two-hundred-dollar sealed-skin sacque and the cook a red dress, and the trips are sealed.—Chicago Ledger.

A New Wrinkle for Modern Society.

As there are flirtations and rumors of flirtations in the air, it is perfectly natural importation of the system of scenes from Washington. The scenes are now too soon. No drawing-room will then be considered complete without scenes enough to render such, possible, in the room secure in the privacy of the enchanting music. Well, the one example left out, of course, will be a scene. The idea is to create all the difficulties now in the way of conversation, don't you know, and remove the tension imposed upon the nerves of a person who is trying to make a few pointed remarks and at the same time look totally unconcerned in the eyes of the probably observing company. There are a score of advantages to be gained from the screen scheme in society. Each person will fit a set to his own particular wants and needs, and when the hour for striking the blow in favor of the new reform arrives, the city will be ready to a man to say a word in its behalf. How charming Mrs. Whitney's new ball room will look broken into scores of cozy nooks, each with its own pretty decorative arrangement and central motive. Thinking of a few parlors in town now, I believe the screen notion is not entirely unknown in the city. Mme. de Strave arranged her parlors with substantial sofas, made with banks and hedges of greenery arranged, and everybody was charmed with the supremely artistic effect.—Washington Capitolism.

Descent of Queen Victoria.

The line runs thus: Egbert, the first Saxon King of all England, Ethelwulf, Alfred the Great, Edward the Elder, Edmund, Edgar, Ethelred the Unready, Edmund Ironside, Edward (not a King), Margaret, wife of Malcolm, King of Scotland; Matilda, who married Henry I. of England, thus uniting the Saxon and Norman lines; Maud, wife of Geoffrey Plantagenet; Henry II., John, Henry III., Edward I., Edward II., Edward III., Lionel, Duke of Clarence; Philippa, who married Edward Mortimer, Earl of March; Roger Mortimer, Earl of March; Anne Mortimer, who married Richard, Earl of Cambridge; Richard, Duke of York; Edward IV., Elizabeth, who married Henry VII., thus uniting the York and Lancaster branches of the royal house; Margaret Tudor, wife of James IV. of Scotland; James V. of Scotland, Mary Queen of Scots, James VI. of Scotland and I. of England, Elizabeth, wife of Frederick, Elector Palatine; Sophia, wife of Ernest Augustus, Elector of Hanover; George I., George II., Frederick, Prince of Wales; George III., Edward, Duke of Kent; Victoria.—Inter Ocean.

PARENTS AND CHILDREN.

A TERRIBLE MISTAKE.—The monstrous, horrible line that we told dad iron to make them obedient by wursing upon their tears are numbered by scores. Such children are easily identified, for they are almost paralyzed when they see the stranger crew into snake; a rat or mouse, of interesting habits, may set them into convulsions; that charming feature of the country, the woodland, where many a happy hour may be spent, is the home of beasts that live on innocent little children; that interesting object, the worm, about which Darwin wrote a whole volume, causes a shudder of repulsion; and various other creations of nature that children love to be told about become sources of the keenest pain.

We once knew a mother who tried to govern her children by telling them that "the old man will be after you" in consequence of this, in fear and trembling, they shunned all old men—those fellow-beings of ours—and were ever ready to feel for a lost children. Young people grow out of these fears in time, but many of them haunt them through life. The mental lasting of fear is caused by peopling darkness with ghosts, hobgoblins, and dangerous men, thereby filling with terrors the darkness of night, whether outdoors or in the enlighted room of a house.—Detroit Free Press.

BOY STORIES GAMES.—It is not necessary to lay a great amount of money to spent in toys and games. If the children are properly encouraged and protected a little, they may prepare the materials for their own games, thus—with small cost—two desirable things—acquiring manual and mental facility in the manufacture and production of something with which to be afterward instructed and amused. In the card games many can be prepared on plain bristol board cards in mannerspil, involving simple facts in history, botany, geography, etc., or the always valuable and interesting word making game can be prepared on small bits of cards by drawing the letters with pen and ink, or pasting on letters cut from old bills, newspapers, etc. In board games the cover of a paper box serves well for the surface to be decorated with the pen, pencil, or water-colors. In "ye olde times," when time counted was not cursed with manufactures of games, our grandfathers on the lines of fox-and-geese, twelve-men-morris, and checkers on the sides of pine boards, cut out with a knife, when necessary, with red chalk, and using buttons, pieces of white corn, or red and beans for counters or men, and it is related by those who claim to know that more pleasure was derived from these crude constructions than the children of the present generation get from their modelled elegant editions in gold and enamel.

Many card valuable and interesting games have gone out of date, or lost, and are not to be bought, but which may be reproduced from the instructions of some older persons who may have played them in their youth; and if the details are not fully remembered, others equally good may be originated.

All games are made by some one, or by a number of persons, either at one or by slow growth, with practice and various changes, modifications, and improvements, so that there is no reason why one may not originate others as good as the best in the market, and at the same time make game is much more valuable to its originator or participants than a dollar which is or no aspects is equally good or better—as a game. The idea is to create all the difficulties now in the way of conversation, don't you know, and remove the tension imposed upon the nerves of a person who is trying to make a few pointed remarks and at the same time look totally unconcerned in the eyes of the probably observing company. There are a score of advantages to be gained from the screen scheme in society. Each person will fit a set to his own particular wants and needs, and when the hour for striking the blow in favor of the new reform arrives, the city will be ready to a man to say a word in its behalf. How charming Mrs. Whitney's new ball room will look broken into scores of cozy nooks, each with its own pretty decorative arrangement and central motive. Thinking of a few parlors in town now, I believe the screen notion is not entirely unknown in the city. Physicians Have Found Out

That a consumptive and foreign element in the blood, developed by indigestion, is the cause of rheumatism. This acts upon the sensitive membranes covering of the muscles and ligaments of the joints, causing constant and shifting pain, and suggesting, as a cause, some chalky deposit, which produces stiffness and inflammation of the joints. For such complaints Jayne's Expectorant is regarded as Nature's specific. Sold by druggists.

THE HOTEL CLERK'S STORY.

It is the fashion among many so-called humorists to represent the American hotel clerk as a lordly and supercilious being, who, with a twoshilling diamond in his immaculate shirt front and a look of contemptuous disdain upon his chaste features, sends tired and travel-stained arrivals off to impossible regions in the fifteenth story, or laughtily refuses them any lodging whatever.

The fact is that the true American hotel clerk is an invaluable feature of our civilization. The time of the arrivals and departures of all the trains on all the railroads is at his tongue's end; he is full of information about what is interesting at the theaters, and of stories of actors and actresses who have stopped at his hotel, and what a kindly man, who, if the house is crowded, will let you sleep on a flaxen table. Mr. W. P. Hammond, who is clerk at the West End Hotel, 503 and 505 West Madison street, Chicago, is of this obliging disposition and is always ready to give any information regarding his hotel to those who seek it. The accomplished humbug of the West End has recently suffered with rheumatism. The story of her cure is thus told by Clerk Hammond:

"Our laundresses was taken with quite a severe attack of rheumatism in the lower limbs, suffering much pain and being scarcely able to walk. She heard of Athlophoros and got a bottle of the medicine and sent me to the drug store to buy a bottle for her. I was induced to try some myself, after she had taken the first dose; she felt so much better. I was a sufferer from rheumatism in my knee.

"Before taking this never, but better never let when troubled with a cough or cold. Take a dose of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral at once, which removes all irritation, and allays the cough. Prices 25 cents and $1.

"Do you want the best cake?"

"About one bottle."

"Has she had any return of the pain?"

"Not to my knowledge," replied Mr. Hammond, "and I am certain she would be likely to say something about it if she had. She speaks of Athlophoros in the highest terms, and I have recommended it to many. In one case I remember the cure was as quick as in her own."

The secretary of Clerk Hammond's statements is fully confirmed by the landlady herself, who is not averse to having it known how she was cured.

"I will tell you something about my cure," she said to a reporter who called to learn the facts in her case. "I was so lame and suffered so much pain that it was impossible for me to bend my limbs or walk around my room without taking hold of the back of a chair for support. My relief, after taking the first dose of Athlophoros, was almost immediate. In fact, after taking a few doses I was well and able to do my work as usual. At the same time that I was suffering from the rheumatism, there was a lady boarding in my hotel who was suffering with facial neuralgia so much that it was impossible for her to set up. I advised her to try her medicine, and she said she would if I have to Athlophoros. After she had taken two doses of the stuff, and all the next day I know I saw her rushing for a street-car to go up town. My sympathy in this instance caused me sickness. I had it a positive relief to see her back in her room, looking always keep some in the hotel, as I cannot afford to be without it in my business, and I can't trouble while I can get a medicine like Athlophoros."

Athlophoros is the discoverer of your drug store, and will be sent to anyone who cannot get it from the druggist, on receipt of regular price—one dollar per bottle. We prefer that people who are suffering should buy it from druggists, but if they cannot do so we will forward it to them, carriage paid, on receipt of price. Address, The Athlophoros Co., 112 Wall street, New York.

Consumption, the greatest curse of the age, and bane of thousands of our brightest and best, is conquered. It is no longer in doubt. Its success in diseases of the throat and lungs are little less than miraculous. All druggists have it.

WHAT WARNER'S SAFE CURE CURES AND WHY.

Congestion of the Kidneys, Back Ache.

Inflammation of the Kidneys, Bladder or Urinary Organs.

Catarrh of the Bladder, Gravel, Stone, Dropsy, Enlarged Prostate Gland, Impotency or General Debility, Bright's Disease.

WHY? Because it is the only remedy known that has power to expel the uric acid and urea, of which there are some 700 grains secreted each day as the result of consumption, age, and disease, if retained in the blood, it kills six men. It is the direct cause of all the above complaints.

IT CURES ALSO Jaundice, Enlargement of the Liver, Abscess and Pain in the Side, Fever, Biliousness, Headache, Fever and Ague, Constipation, Lassitude, Loss of Appetite, Dyspepsia, Costiveness, Dropsy, Dizziness, Nervous Prostration, Female Complaints, Dull Stitch, and every ungovernable and painful symptom which results from liver complaint.

WHY? Because it has a specific and positive action on the liver as well as on the kidneys, increasing the secretion and flow of bile, regulates its enlarging function, removes inflammation, and, in a word, restores to the natural activity, without which health is an impossibility.

IT CURES ALSO Female Complaints, Leucorrhœa, Displacements, Enlargements, Ulceration, Painful Menstruation, makes Pregnancy safe, prevents Convulsions and Child-bed Fever, and aids nature by restoring functional activity.

WHY? All these troubles, as is well known by every physician of education, arise from congestion and impaired kidney action, causing stagnation of the blood vessels and breaking down, and thus in the beginning and first causes of all the ailments from which women suffer, and must as surely follow as night the day.

WHY Warner's Safe Cure is acknowledged by thousands of our best medical men to be the only remedy which can be relied upon on scientific principles, striking at the very root of the disease by its action on the kidneys and liver. For, if these organs were kept in health all the morbid matter would be thoroughly purged of it through the urinary channels. On the contrary, if they are deranged, the urine ceases to flow, and the poisonous matter is and creeping death to the most remote part of the body.

WHY 80 per cent. of all diseases which affect humanity arise from impaired kidneys, is shown by modern authorities. Warner's Safe Cure, by its action, positively restores them to health and full working capacity, never curing all the above diseases and why when the cause is removed, and we guarantee that Warner's Safe Cure is a positive remedy for these ills.

As you value health take it to avoid sickness, or it will ad insult and injury. Do not, and cure the other life through a guide which has oled hinges.—Christian Herald.

THE MAIDEN'S FAREWELL.

The time has come and we must part,
Thou dearest, kindest, best!
How oft I've clasped thee to my heart
Will my heart to know.
When first I saw thee I was sore
Thy charms I'd ne'er forget
Thy voice sounded like music
All things said I yet.
How oft to days gone by
My form thou hast endeared
Another takes thy place at last
And clasps you round the waist.
But sure is life—we must part,
In midst of change we dwell,
Remember be my friend
Only sweet face thou well.

Around the County.

County Seat Again.

East Jordan, March 8, 1886.

EDITOR JOURNAL.—The Sentinel of the 3d inst comes to us with another contribution to its county-seat literature. Like white hats proceeded it on the same subject from the same high source, it is totally irrelevant to the question as to whether it is for the best interests of this county at this time to allow the county seat to remain at East Jordan, or to remove it to the extreme northern edge of Boyne City, or, more probably, into the swamp to the north of that. The Sentinel man does not even offer to the question at issue, but proceeds in his characteristic fashion to scandalize a very respectable merchant of this village, whose family is one of the most respected families of your village. That the readers of the JOURNAL may form their own opinion upon it, I give the opening sentences, the rest being worse rather than better:

A business man of East Jordan, who, however, considers Charlevoix the best place in which to live, has a letter in last week's JOURNAL, denying a naughty lie that was told about him. It would be eminently proper for the peripatetic cosmopolite to keep on denying, and see if he can so successfully disprove the charge that he has been a traitor to the town he lives in.

And what was the immediate cause of this outpouring of the Sentinel man's wrath? Why, Mr. Loveday had ventured to publish a letter in your issue of the week previous, denying one of the many falsehoods that have been put in circulation in regard to East Jordan. The truth seemed to affect the great editor as a red rag does an old gobbler.

The chief's indiscretions are notorious, but we hardly think he would have been so indiscreet as to raise the cry of traitor, as he has done, had he known the whisperings that are afloat in various parts of the county as to his own honesty upon the question; unless he does it on the old "stop thief" plan. Many there are who cannot account for his conduct upon any other theory than that he has for a very considerable time been in the secrets and employ of the men who have for years past been trying to move the county seat to Boyne City. The reasoning here is: This town and village has always, by the official acts of its supervisor, as well as by the popular vote, supported Charlevoix as against Boyne City on the county seat question. The good feeling which has existed between East Jordan and Charlevoix must, then, be destroyed, and he and they use their best efforts to destroy it. Then there was the scheme by which they will of the people as expressed at the ballot box was to be defeated, so that the county seat should not go to East Jordan at all, but be moved as once to Boyne City, to which he was a party with them.

Then, when that did not work, there came his secret meetings, both at Boyne City and Charlevoix with those well-known schemers, and his immediate espousal of their cause. Taken together they certainly have a very dubious aspect; so much so, indeed, that if the Sentinel man's charts are really clear, he owes it to his friends to make an explanation. We do not wish to be understood as charging him positively with being a traitor to his town and the western end of the county, but we do wish to be understood to say that his conduct has not infinitely greater appearance of guilt than the conduct of the man he accused of being a traitor. Mr. Loveday's was open and clear to ever body; much of the Sentinel man's has been secret and as "zealous." Probably, however, a judicial verdict, if taken now, would show him not guilty, but the verdict of history will as sure, be different. Nor will his more word be a sufficient contradiction for those best acquainted with his negotiations. For him he not a queer family of disclaiming responsibility? Witness this sample. The Enterprise, of the 25th ult., contains the following:

> It might be well to call the attention of our readers to the fact that the Sentinel of April 1st, 1885—four days before election—continued the following words relative to moving the county seat: "If it goes there, it goes to stay and don't you forget it, next Monday." * * * "As far as the personal wishes of Charlevoix people go, they would, if the county seat must be moved at present, prefer to see it at East Jordan to any other point. East Jordan has stood by Charlevoix. It is the second largest village in the county. If a railroad reaches Charlevoix, as it is bound to in the near future, it will be most certain to come through East Jordan. And water travel offers better connections in that direction."

> And last week's Sentinel answers it in this fashion:

> The East Jordan Enterprise evidently saves the files of the Sentinel, judging from its liberal quotations from its columns of a year ago. We cannot return the compliment in this matter, as we have not considered the Enterprise worth saving, and we certainly do not consider its current utterances worth noticing.

> This is but a single specimen of the Sentinel's cel-like ways, that of late are far too common for common decency. B.

Ironton.

[Our Ironton correspondent delayed his correspondence until late in order to give a report of the meeting to discuss the county seat question; after which, by accident, it did not reach us until too late for publication. We give a portion of it this week.]

Messrs. Corbett, Hill, and Norton, of Boyne City, discussed the question that hung at the county seat of Charlevoix county, in the Ironton school house Tuesday evening. A challenge was sent to East Jordan to participate in the debate, but for reasons best known to themselves, they failed to comment, and Boyne City had the argument all its own way. They came, loaded for bear, with maps to show that Boyne City is near the geographical center of the county, but gracefully acknowledging Ironton to be the center of population and the center of commerce. Lawyer Corbett fed off in the discussion, spanking earnestly and candidly—creating a good impression, and beyond a doubt winning some votes. He was followed by Elder Hill, who argued the advantages a change in the county seat would be to the eastern end of the county, which, according to the elder, is being settled rapidly and will soon make Boyne City the center of population in the county. The elder didn't take into consideration the fact that the western end of the county is likely to grow rapidly enough to keep up a respectable balance. On the other hand, to quote the late Wm. Shakspeare, he "condemned with faint praise," by informing us that when the timber is cut from the Pine Lake region our only resource will be gone and our property and growth at an end. The "cast a coldness over the meetin." The elder courteously answered the many questions, relative to the subject put by the audience. The ungainly and profanity on the part of the last speaker was not calculated to win votes. We may or we may not favor Boyne City in the coming election; but we do not propose to be dictated to on the subject. If Boyne City is the most desirable point for the county seat, get it. Some of Ironton will favor it, and some will not; but we don't propose to barter our vote for a bridge across "south arm," nor if the gentleman brings the promise from fourteen supervisors instead of nine. We can swim.

The Ironton hotel has been leased to Mr. A. Munson and will be opened in a few days. Mr. Munson will work his farm in connection with the hotel and so provide his guests with fresh vegetables, milk and butter. The hotel will be refurnished, tastefully built, and every thing done that can be done to make it attractive and home like.

Mr. E. A. Lewis has accepted a position with the Pine Lake Iron Co. and, with his family, will take up his residence in Ironton.

Boyne City offers us a bridge across the Arm, and backs the promise with the signatures of nine Supervisors. If Ironton gives a majority vote in favor of the county seat question, but if we fail to give a majority of our votes for Ironton, we can swim and be thanked. "It is a question of being hooked or having a pocket, so prefer the latter, but if those timber operators should not be respected this spring, must we sell our tubs and swim too?

Hon. Strong left the appointment left vacant by Hon. Vandenberg, Independent last Friday evening, leaving an appointment for the 19th inst.

I am six years old
And like play and fun.
I mean to grow up
Like George Washington.
So when mother said,
"Who ate all the pie?"
I spoke like a man,
And said: "It was I."

But she didn't say
She'd rear, if I lost the pie
And knew that her boy
Would not tell a lie.
She put out me up
Where I couldn't see,
Then sent me to bed
Without any tea.

In Jamaica we can study the negro character in all its purity(?). Those living near the coast are generally contaminated by associating with sailors, but in the interior, where a white man is not seen often enough to allow familiarity to breed contempt, Mosse "Buckra" (white man) receives homage enough to elevate himself considerably in his own estimation. The negro discriminates widely between the white swede and the "sweet water buckra," all in favor of the latter. The negro character is a strange mixture of contradiction. They are pious thieves and would steal a prayer book on general principals. They are emphatically a church going people, and the man is poor indeed who has not one suit of respectable clothes for church wear, though he is clothed in rags and barefooted throughout the week. Yellow gloves and a "stove-pipe" hat are an additional luxury which it is the ambition of all to possess. The favorite costume of the women on this day is a white dress with a bright colored sash around the waist and a hat decorated with many bright artificial flowers. They seldom put on their dress until arriving near the church, but carry their hat in their hands and then dress on their heads. This is a matter of comfort as well as economy, as their feet are not accustomed to confinement. The one grand day in the life of the negro is his wedding day. It is only too common for them to live together after the manner of slavery time when marriage was not allowed, but once he decides to marry, it must be done regardless of expense. In very many cases they live together for years before marriage, and while bringing up a large family of "quickie" children are gradually increasing the fund for their wedding day. They make a great merit of being married and are not slow to proclaim it. I remember putting the question to a negro: "Sambo, are you a Christian?" and being answered "I'se a lawfully married man, sah." The black man has a proneness for all occasions. The following apply to the married state: "Come see me is nothing, come lib wi' me is something," and "marriage got tied, him bite like a dog." The propensity to steal seems to be an almost inherent element in the negro character. Burglary is abused unknown, but petty thieving, as a branch of human or a sense of economy, is their delight. CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN.

The County Seat Question.

It has been asserted by several gentlemen, who saw the letter of President Hughart before it was printed in the Sentinel, that one important paragraph was omitted from the Sentinel, thus avoiding the question it is one, if indeed it does not greatly distort its meaning. The omitted paragraph stated that on the earnest solicitation of Mr. Geo. Beardsley, tres pass agent, the engineer was permitted to come at this time and make a preliminary (pretended) survey of the proposed route. When it is understood that Mr. Beardsley is an active partisan in the county seat struggle, his purpose is apparent. We are sorry we cannot have complete confidence in the scheme as it is now being worked.

The letters from the president of the G. R. & E. R. Co. which are being circulated for the benefit of Boyne City, all refer to some proposition from a committee of citizens from that town. Without their proposition the letters mean nothing. As we have understood it, their proposition contemplates the building of a line from Boyne Falls to Boyne City, and no farther. And the president evidently had that in mind and full when he wrote of the proposed line to Charlevoix, so far as our company is concerned, there is no truth in the rumor." And this view of the matter is supported by the statement to Mr. Hughart's letter, as published on yesterday's Sentinel, that "Mr. Clover proposed to put on a boat to haul his ore from Boyne City to Ironton."

Perhaps the Sentinel is not "secretly in the pay of Boyne City," but to reason of an understanding with gentlemen from that village the editor has uttered sentiments exactly opposite his previous assertions, and has received the business of him he could not approach for any other consideration. Even as bitter a politician as this is the supervisor from Evangeline, who laid up to the last meeting of the board of supervisors long supposed to be a warm personal and party friend of the editor of the JOURNAL, refused the courtesy of a motion to substitute the JOURNAL for the Sentinel when the matter of county printing was being voted upon, asserting that "the Sentinel is known to favor the east end of the county on the county seat question, and you are not." And this at a time when the editor of the JOURNAL had expressed an opinion on the question beyond a refusal to sign an agreement to make an aggressive fight against East Jordan, and had given no intention of taking any side of the issue beyond an impartial consideration of the best interests of a majority of the people of the whole county. By reason of this understanding with the editor of the Sentinel all past offenses were forgiven, all past slurs and vilifications were overlooked, and every dollar of business turned to him that was possible. This much is perhaps legitimate, but is it all? Where did that $200 worth of new material come from which he boasts of having just bought and put into his printing office?

"The JOURNAL can do as good service for East Jordan in advocating that idea as any other." Sentinel. We deny any intention to work for East Jordan. We opposed its removal there last spring because it was as far from the center of population and business as well as geographically, as was Charlevoix. But we are in favor of not removing it again until it is determined whether the geographical center of the county, is also the center of business, population, and accessibility. If it goes to Boyne City now, there is little hope of ever getting it back any nearer to Charlevoix, but if it fails to carry now, it is the avowed purpose of a majority of the townships to keep submitting it until they finally get it where they want it. By reason of that intention, we have a hope that even he brought to Ironton, and this better accommodate Charlevoix, besides accommodating a greater number of people from other parts of the county, than it now does at East Jordan or ever can at Boyne City.

"We should not like to assert that Bro. Strang is in the pay of East Jordan." Sentinel. Don't do it, then. If you do, you will tell "a deliberate and cold-assal lie."

It is wonderful what a power there is in a railroad "locus" when applied for county seat purposes. Last year we were to have a railroad from Elmira to Charlevoix via East Jordan. This year it is Boyne Falls to Charlevoix via Boyne and Ironton. And when you get through it will be all for votes.

LOVE'S MINISTRY.

BY WM. HAYMITHS.

I care not that upon the brow
Time hath set many gloomy
Yet I love the wrinkled sage
Are the lofty thoughts passionless
Hath more than passion's power;
Its stationing holy tenderness
Can consecrate this and hour.

The possessor of thy youthful hand,
The silent sympathy
The troubled heart can understand
Though vehemence it may be,
I thought, of sublimer fate on earth
The fabled test, wert thou
Thy spirit, thy affection, thy worth
Still I can proved thee now.

O love, thick soothes than fortune's bed;
That soeks the lone and lost
That lifts the fainting head, fainting fled,
And shields the benighted lost.
Thy spirit, thy affection, thy unrest,
To heal the broken heart
Where comfort then act.

I demand thee under the sunrise of bloom—
A thing of joy and mirth;
But found thee gulfing
An angel by the hearth.
The sorrow must be a so indeed,
The great must be
And not the heart and deep the
That cannot lean to thee.

ELMER HAZEN'S ENEMY.

BY C. LEON MEREDITH.

Well dark in the forest of Minnesota, Twenty-five years ago, there stood a lone cabin occupied by three individuals.

Why these three chose to dwell in such complete seclusion no one could tell.

Infrequently did hunters call at the isolated habitant, and on certain occasions, and partaken of food at the woodman's table.

The cabin had stood there and been occupied for more than two years, and a knoll of several acres, destitute of timber, furnished an ever garden and field, where vegetables and grain grew luxuriantly.

Elmer Hazen was the name of the cabin's owner, and his family companions were his wife and a little girl of five years.

At the time we visit this secluded spot, the Sioux Indians were making their bloody raids upon the settlers of that region of Minnesota.

Consequently, and rum had been spread broadcast whenever the hunted warriors had seen fit to go with fire-brand and rifle.

The news of the terrible slaughter of the whites had reached the cabin of the recluse, and no little concern was felt by the family, for the red men knew very well of the hidden home in the forest while.

One evening, as darkness settled over the lonely abode, Elmer Hazen and his wife showed in their features uncommon concern.

Fresh news had come to them of the savages' bloodthirsty raids. Both felt a heavy weight about the heart, and their ears were constantly on the alert for any uncommon sound.

The windows and single door of the cabin were securely fastened as soon as it had become entirely dark, and the couple sat down at the bewitching, where smoldered a re-gleeful fire, and mused fora time in silence.

There was but a single apartment in the cabin, and but few articles of furniture.

A curly maple-wood bed, long upon pins driven into the logs, and nicely dressed fars hanging about the room told that the man who had dared to establish that region alone was no inferior hunter.

The wife at length broke the silence:

"To-night, Elmer, I almost regret our leaving a civilized home to come into this life of deprivation and danger."

"Deprivations are not pleasant, to be sure," the woodman returned, "but as to danger, we are safer here than there."

"You think so?"

"Yes, The lives of ourselves or little Effie are no more sacred to that Spaniard, Morales, than to the Sioux. The hunting down of the red man is only for a season, and they will become friends, but the Spaniard's hatred will be perpetual and murderous.

"Well, let the arm of the law be something of a shield there? It certainly cannot be exercised here."

"The law is of no value to a dead man, Elmer. Morales sought my life and drove me hither. He made a vow, and one he intended to keep. His tend to keep the same was no protection to me or husband to him. He is a desperate man, more venomous than the serpent, more subtle than the adder, and more awful than the savage."

"But the reign of terror in Minnesota is terrible, Elmer," the wife said, a shadow of pain crossing her features, as she drew little Effie closer to her heart.

"I can fight a Sioux in ambush or hand to hand, but I cannot contend against a villain who stabs in the dark or administers poison. I feel safer here than in the old home."

The good wife felt really as did her husband, so she dropped the argument, and both again watched the glow of the dying embers in silence.

Three years before Elmer Hazen had been a resident of New Orleans and in easy circumstances.

One evening he found an old man in the clutches of a villain, and he boldly interfered and wrested the old man of his danger.

The name of the blackleg was Morales, and he became outspoken and muttered curses from between his gritting teeth. Hazen paid no other attention to the affair at the time.

The aged gentleman, who had taken the name and number of his protector, called upon Elmer Hazen the next day to express his thanks, and some fully then he had done under the excitement of the evening before.

At this interview some facts were revealed that put more importance upon the matter than Mr. Hazen had at first thought of.

On the day that the sharper was found with the veteran, the latter had arrived by boat from San Francisco, where he had been a lucky gold-digger, and amassed a small fortune, which he carried in currency upon his person.

Morales had met him upon the boat, and, in a friendly and most affable manner, welcomed to and the new-comer, as he was employed by the city, he said, to protect travels of wealth who did not know the wickedness of the place.

"It is not safe for you to carry so much money upon your person," Mr. Hazen had said, after hearing the veteran's story. "That scoundrel is well known, and, by some device, will get possession of it. He is not too good to take life."

"No danger," was the confident reply. "I have placed the money in a bank, and have taken a certificate of deposit."

The certificate was shown, made payable to the order of Amon Gale.

Mr. Hazen was gratified at this, as the money was beyond the reach of Morales. He expressed his pleasure, and the old man departed.

The next day Mr. Gale called again, looking pale and agitated.

"I am sick," he said, feebly, "and I fear my days are numbered. A strange feeling has taken possession of my heart, and I know the grim monster is at work there."

An hour later a physician called, left a sedative, and said the patient would be better in the morning.

Elmer Hazen remained with the sick man until a late hour.

"I have not a blood relative in all the wide world that I know of," the old man said, "and you are the friend Samaritan, the only friend I have in New Orleans. Should I die I need have what I have to you."

"You must not think of dying," the benefactor returned; "long years may be before you. I hope so, and the doctor says you will be better in the morning."

"He don't know as well as I," the sick man said, feebly. "Hang me a pen and ink, then go to your rest."

The next morning Amon Gale was found dead in his bed, but the large pocketbook that had held his papers was gone.

Following that Morales had pounced the old man the day before and robbed him at night. Hazen had the villain arrested, but through the lack of evidence he was acquitted.

Two Elmer Hazen came near losing his life at the hand of a masked assassin, and once his whole family been near dying through poison that had been mysteriously introduced into their food.

Through the earnest solicitations of his wife and friends, Elmer Hazen converted his property into money and went to Chicago, intensely bad he would find that city when a detective informed him that Morales had followed.

The next move was to a town on the Upper Mississippi.

A few days after reaching that place the burning eyes of the Spaniard were believed to have been seen peering through a window upon Hazen.

Throwing a counter, he bought a few articles for pioneer housekeeping, and was driven away across the country far to the west, where lies the broad, wooded belt.

Three years, Elmer Hazen, with the thoughts of the cabin family as they sat in the lone cabin the night I have mentioned.

The hands upon the little brass clock over the fireplace moved on and on until they indicated the hour of midnight.

Still the couple did not retire. Little Effie had long been fast asleep, unsuspicious of danger, but father and mother were in no mood for sleep.

The silence had been long at the fireside when it was suddenly broken.

Both man and wife started to their feet at the same instant, and stood gazing into each other's faces with apprehensive stare.

A heavy footfall had been heard from without. The tread came nearer and nearer, and finally ceased at the doorstone. A loud, quick rap on the thick planks followed.

"Who can it be?" the wife whispered.

"Hush! listen!" the husband replied.

The rap was repeated, but louder than before.

"Who's there?" the woodman demanded, "A friend from up the Yellow Medicine," was the reply.

"What you here for?"

"I have come to aid you; let me in."

"I guess not. We are not sure that you are not a white renegade with a pack of Indian bloodhounds at your heels."

"Friend or foe, it will make it no worse for you to open the door."

"Suppose I refuse?"

"Then I shall have to talk to you from the outside. I have come half a score of miles to save you and your family, and shall not leave until you believe me a friend and act accordingly."

"I think the man is honest, Elmer; it certainly will the Spaniard's voice," said the cabin owner, turning to his wife. "I've a mind to open the door, anyhow."

"It may be best," the wife returned, at the same time taking down the rifle that hung upon the wall.

The rescuer did not propose to allow any advantage on the part of the visitor, so he drew on a be placed the blade between the planks of the door, and lifted one of the solid pieces of the threshold and, and placed a stout bennch it, thus forming a brace so that the door could be opened only for enough to admit the body of a single person at one time.

The bar was then removed, and the wooden latch lifted.

"Come in!" rang out in a clear tone.

The door opened, and the face of a white man appeared.

It was an honest face, and the first glance at the kind blue eyes convinced the settlers that they had no cause for fear.

"Shut the door; there are none to follow," the new-comer said, in an accent of joy. "But I have no time to spare. My name is Alfred Waters, and I am connected with the Indian agency. To-day intelligence came to me that a party of five Sioux were coming down the river so as to reach your cabin about the hour of dawn, for the purpose of murder and plunder. There being no one to send, I came myself."

"Thanks, friend Waters," Hazen said, extending his hand; "but I don't see how I can better fortify my cabin. I arranged for what might come as soon as I heard of the outbreak. What would you advise in the case?"

"That you make no pretensions to leave the cabin as soon as convenient; at least, before the hour of daylight."

"But we will be trapped if we leave, and the Indians overtake us upon ahead, and defend ourselves as here."

"You have not heard all of my plan yet. On quick Water Brook there are half a dozen trappers located. I will go for them in my return at once."

"But it is a good five miles to that place," the wife said, in a tone that said she was afraid of her husband's being carried in currency upon his person.

Morales had met him upon the boat, and, in a friendly and most affable manner, welcomed to and the new-comer, as he was employed by the city, he said, to protect travels of wealth who did not know the wickedness of the place.

"Yes, but I can be back in a very short time, quick rap on the thick planks followed.

"Who can it be?" the wife whispered.

"Hush! listen!" the husband replied.

The rap was repeated, but louder than before.

"Who's there?" the woodman demanded, "A friend from up the Yellow Medicine," was the reply.

"Four hours from now will be the time of dawn.

"I will try and be here then."

"But if you fail?"

"Then we will meet you. When you are ready to leave follow down the left bank of the Yellow Medicine; but do not attempt to go far away from the cabin, for it is here we must meet the Sioux."

"We will follow your directions."

"And I will come."

The Indian agent moved quickly to the door, then turned back again.

"I see a tin dinner-horn there upon the shelf, allow me to take that, and I will signal you by one sharp blast, occasionally."

The man and wife gave their approval, and taking the horn Alfred Waters listened out into the darkness, and away.

"Our forebodings were not groundless, it appears," the cabin owner said to his wife as he moved about to prepare for leaving the habitation.

Not long did it require for preparation, and then the couple seated themselves again to watch and wait.

The minutes wore away, and then little Effie was awakened and the family left the home.

Elmer Hazen set the plank as it would stay down and make an inside brace to the door.

This was to make the marauders believe that the family was within, and consume a deal of time, and in gaining an entrance a delay would be made which might prove of advantage.

The last of the forest cabin there was no opening, while on the west there was a belt of rugged woodland, and to this they bent their footsteps.

Scarcely had they gained the outskirts of the forest when they were startled by a grating sound.

"It is a coarse rubbing upon the gravel of the creek bottom," Hazen said, as he drew his wife and child into a clump of bushes.

Presently five human forms were seen by the dim starlight moving toward the little log habitation.

They were Sioux, in warpaint and feathers.

"The trappers are not here, Elmer; what is to be done?" Mrs. Hazen whispered.

"Hush! listen!" the man, interrupted.

"I believe I heard it, too, Elmer."

"The second came from a long way off."

"You fully a mile distant."

"Can they reach us in time to save the cabin?"

"Fifteen minutes will bring the trappers home, and then it will be nearly daylight. See how it is beaming up in the east now."

The simple blast of the horn came to them again, after a little time, and it seemed much nearer than before.

Ten minutes of suspense, and then the forest was awakened to the fact that the Sioux had begun work in good earnest.

A flow of light came from the cabin window, and then a band of smoke ascended.

"The house is on fire, Elmer!" the woodman exclaimed, leaping from his hiding-place and starting toward the cabin.

A better thought took possession of him very soon, and he turned back.

"I will not leave you here alone; prowlers may be about," he said, seating himself upon a pile of trees covered with leaves.

The wife and child stood beside the hunter, and gazed upon the scene of destruction.

The volume of smoke increased, and then small, forked tongues of flame flashed out.

Just then a volley of firearms broke the quiet of the morning hour, and a yell of triumph came from the Sioux.

The trappers were armed with rifles and revolvers, and the battle was sharp and decisive.

The savages in their gloatings over the work of the fire-fiend were taken by surprise, and four of them were laid low at the first onset, the fifth plunged madly, wildly away.

Elmer Hazen was about to go to the aid of the trappers when he saw the figure of a Sioux come bounding directly toward him.

The settler brought his rifle quickly up and fired.

The warrior did not slacken his speed at all, but leaped aloof with a wild, whirling motion.

As he drew near it seemed as if his eyes would burst from their sockets.

His arms were held aloof and his lips were separated in nervous contraction so as to show a set of pearly white teeth.

It was a grim, horrifying object that came darting down to them, and somehow those who watched were wonder-struck instead of being intimidated.

A few leaps more and the savage fell at the feet of the hunter.

Before the woodman had time to fully comprehend the situation the wounded man has face upward and gurgled out the name:

"Elmer Hazen!"

Husband and wife started.

They would have spoken, but a mean came over the wounded figure and stifled their attention. He was struggling for breath.

With a painful effort he drew from the pocket of his coat a long, gold watch-box, and holding it up until he felt it taken from his hand, fell back and lay quiet.

"Open the box, Elmer," the wife exclaimed; "it may contain the body of a single person at one time."

"This is just the sort of costly remedies," was the reply of Mr. Hazen, taking the red mess's hand; "but, fellow is dead."

The box, however, was opened, but it contained only a piece of paper, yet that little object made the eyes of the wondering people open widely.

The ship was a bank certificate made payable to Elmer Hazen and indorsed by Amon Gale. The golden lion also contained the name of the old Californian engraved upon the inner side of the cover.

The forester stooped over the prostrate form, and in a few seconds had buried a white breast.

"Morales, the Spaniard!"

The name was pronounced by the woodman in a hoarse whisper.

"He has followed us to his own destruction."

"Yes it was really he who killed Amon Gale, but why did he not get the money?" the wife said.

"He could not. He doubtless intended to do so, but the old Indian inclosed the paper to him, but reached the room too late, and now I see his plan in the last move. He has followed me to get the indorsement of myself. With the Indians he intended to make me assign it to him as a consideration for saving my life, but has been overreached, and would have murdered us all to cover up the clues, but the trappers are coming this way."

The story was soon told to the indepted hunters, who surrounded the fallen Spaniard.

Before the sun was far up the bodies of the Indians who had come to destroy were buried, and the defenders of the exiled family returned.

No delay was made in ending the hermitage.

The cloud upon the life of Elmer Hazen was lifted, and he went back to civilization to enjoy the new fortune that had come to him in such a singular manner.—Chicago Ledger.

EMERSON'S PURSE.

The Annoyance That the Philosopher Endures at Willie in a Vermont Village.

A young man in New York has among his most cherished possessions a letter written nearly twenty-one years ago by Ralph Waldo Emerson. It was sent by the philosopher to the young man's mother rather singular circumstances.

"I never saw Emerson but once," said the gentleman to the lady to the other day, "and then I was too young to remember much about him. When I was a child he came to our town in Vermont to lecture, and was invited by my mother to spend the night at our house. An odd thing happened after the lecture. As he was leaving the lecture-hall his pocket-book was either lost or stolen. It contained the amount of his fee, the lecture, and some money and other things besides. He came to our house, but said nothing about his loss that night. I remember that I was in the dining-room the next morning when he came in. He imagined I was left on my mind is that he was a wonderfully tall man with a kindly face. He ramble the dining-room and took no sip in his arms, and, lifting me up, kissed me on the head as he could, he said:

"'Where did you get those big blue eyes?'

"I don't remember whether he asked for breakfast. I hope he did, it was peculiarly appropriate for him, as that article was never served at that house in our town. After breakfast Mr. Emerson asked to see my mother alone. Then he explained that he had lost his pocket-book, and that he had left all his money—and quite good for being under the necessity of asking for a small loan. This, of course, was promptly made. The next day or the day after he returned the money loaned. Here is the letter he wrote," and the speaker handed out the following letter, written by Mr. Emerson's own hand:

"DEAR MRS. ——, ALBANY, Jan. 13, 1856.—DEAR MRS. ——: I inclose $10, the sum you so kindly lent me, with my best thanks; lest am still vexed with clouding your pure hospitality by sympathy for such an absurd mishap.

"In the rare chance that the wallet should be picked up by an honest man, I add, what I believe I told you, that there was no name, it is a common pasteboard one, containing the account bills which Mr. —— had just given me, and perhaps $25 or $28 more, two or three bills losing of the Concord Mass. Bank, some postage stamps, and a blank check on the Atlantic Bank, Boston. I do not think of any other means of identification, and I am quite sure none will be wanted. But I am sorry I did not say to you that I lost rather lose it than have it advertised in any manner.

I recollect your house and its inhabitants with great pleasure, and I hope I may see you again. If you are in my neighborhood it will give me great pleasure to show you my home hold. One of these days Willie (one of the lady's sons) will come to see me on his way to Cambridge, I hope, if Cambridge needs its faults and desires the best boys. But the boys of this day, as I told you, seem to me to have a great future before them. Yours with kindest regard,

"R. W. EMERSON.

"Mrs. ——."

The letter was written on heavy linen paper, in an irregular but easily legible hand.

"I never saw Mr. Emerson afterward," the young man continued, "whether I could have remedied the error or not, I did not go there, nor did my brother. Perhaps, though, we were not the best boys. I often thought I should like to go to Concord, recall this occurrence to Mr. Emerson's mind, and introduce myself as the boy whom he lifted in his arms, and whose lips were the apple of. But I never did. And I never heard the lost wallet was recovered."—Boston Globe.

Herr Hager's Game.

Dynamiting is a game that can be worked both ways. Herr Hager, the wealthy German banker, is the most practical man in the world, and always carries a couple of chronometers about with him. Thanks to this habit, he is a frequent victim to pickpockets, as not a week passes without his losing one of his watches. At first he had recourse to all kinds of safety chains; then one morning he took no precaution whatever, and quietly allowed himself to be robbed. At night, on returning from business, he took up the evening paper, when he uttered an exclamation of delight, and then ran down to the police station. This is what he had noticed: Twelve at the clock, a violent explosion took place in a house in ——street, occupied by Mr. S——, a wealthy tobacconist. The hands of the clock were shattered, and the left eye of the Emperor William was blown out. The watch case with dynamite, which exploded during the operation of winding. Since that time, no pickpockets have been stolen from Herr Hager.

CHAMPAGNES are represented by allegoricos. Their tails are used for swimming, and their legs and hips to lift them out of the mud. They build nests of straws and vegetables, and lay their eggs in decay; a layer of eggs, a layer of vegetation. The heat of the vegetation hatches the eggs. The crocodile differs from the alligator by having no long separation between the nostrils. It has a value in the Great Lakes, Canada, and the Mississippi, and in the Nile and of the Ganges are most dangerous. Alligators are called cold blooded because of their inability to develop heat in their bodies.

A Wise Father.

The Crown Prince of Prussia was always a very sensible man in the management of his household, and he is ably seconded by his wife. On one occasion the governess of his children came to him and said:

"Your Highness, I must complain of the little Prince; he refuses to have his face washed in the morning."

"Does he?" answered the Crown Prince. "We'll remedy that. After that let him go unwashed."

"But he will be dirty," said the governess.

Now the sentence have to salute every member of the royal family—children and all—whenever they pass. The day after, the little four-year-old prince went out for a walk with his governess. As they passed a sentry-box where a grim soldier stood rigid without presenting arms, the little prince—never mind to universal deference—looked displeased, but said nothing. Presently another sentry was passed. Neither did the one give a sign of recognition. The Prince angrily spoke of it to his governess, and they passed on. And when the walk was finished, and they had met many soldiers, who some of them saluted the prince, the little fellow blushed to to his father, exclaiming:

"Papa—papa—you must whip every man in your guards! They refuse to salute when I pass."

"Ah! my son," said the Crown Prince, "they do rightly, for clean soldiers never salute ability little princes." Into that the boy took a shower bath over7 morning.—Inglewide.

BETTER THAN A GOLDEN LEG.

"Miss Kilmansegg and her golden leg," will never be forgotten so long as the genius of Thomas Hood, with all his genuine humor and tender pathos is remembered.

It is doubtful if any one will ever envy the heroine of that poem her unique leg, which cost her so many and severe pangs. In this prosaic age a good strong leg of flesh, bone, and muscle is much to be preferred, whether it belongs to a pedestrian or a solid unassuming group.

It is to this last class that Mr. M. P. Schenck, of 672 West Lake street, Chicago, belongs. Mr. Shenck is a well-known dry goods merchant, and counts himself fortunate in having a pair of good strong legs. For one of his legs he has a peculiar regard as his name and fortune depend upon them. Athlophoros saved it for him, however, and for that invaluable remedy he gave testimony to the world in a letter so gravely well told by Mr. Schenck in his own words:

During the Spring of 1884 I was sick with rheumatism in its very worst form, and was confined to my bed entirely helpless for about four weeks. My leg swelled so enormously that I could not let it rest on the best without some support. So I had to sit up in a chair day and night, and for this I thing was fastened. I could rest my leg on this, changing the height, and in the manner I could do so I found some relief. During the four weeks I try in bed I had many remedies offered me. I tried all such as I thought would do me good. Then they tried their very best to give me relief, but could not. Instead of getting better, I was growing worse.

My doctor finally decided that it would be necessary to make an incision in my leg, and if there was not a marked improvement in my condition from that operation, the amputation of my leg would be required. This, as you may well imagine, discouraged and disheartened me beyond measure. About this time my wife read in a Northwestern lady, paper for which we subscribe, the name of a personal friend who had been cured of a case of Elephiasis. She called my attention to it, and I read it once. Yet it held me and by its strength it held me to the end. Athlophoros was the remedy, and we began using it immediately. I had taken but two bottles when I was able to walk without my crutches. I continued using it, and in a few days I was able to dispense with the crutches entirely. I continued to use it, and I gained in strength and in every way I improved. I was able to be dressed and sit in a chair

Around the County.

"Taffy and Hypocrisy."

East Jordan, March 15, 1886.

EDITOR JOURNAL.—The great man of the Sentinel has been promising for a long time that he was soon going to make developments,—he was abused and was going to hatch some thing big; young peaweeks, perhaps. Last week he gave these great devel- opments to the world, partly under the head line "Taffy and Hypocrisy," but he didn't not develop, and does not argue, —he cannot come down to such small business. He is still aloft and gives us Brutus and Cæsar, and Othello and Iago. He probably intends to vote them. Read what he says:

"If East Jordan stood by us in our county seat fights it was the old story of Brutus and Cæsar—not that they loved Cæsar less, but that they loved Rome more. Not that they hated Cæsar less, but that they hated Boyne City more."

In every way possible East Jordan has been arrayed against Charlevoix. Our ungrateful sons have their glory. Our gain has been their disappointment; and in matters which concerned our good for more than that of the county seat, East Jordan has been, is now, and ever will be the "Iago" to our "Othello," and Charlevoix people know it too well to take in any of the taffy that is offered."

Now don't you see the force and strength of the great man's argument, and how directly it is to the point? Just put his style in practice. You need a man on the street and say "how about the county seat; why should it be moved to Boyne City?" and he at once throws himself into a 'Stanley' attitude and with much solemnity, says "Not that I love Cæsar less but I love O Moore." Such an argument would be overwhelming, and you would go immediately and vote for the removal. But the great man is lady awake and in dead earnest, so he gives us much more of the same sort. Just read the following which he considers so grand that he has it stand alone:

"Some say East Jordan twice stood by Charlevoix, therefore the service should be returned. It is also said that satan was once in paradise, but it is pretty generally conceded that satan is not now an angel."

Don't you see the point,—and the exact application and bearing? Oh, but he is an able man. Yet it is in still another paragraph that he reaches the climax, when he says "It is not a pent up Utica." Just think of that, now. What a burst of combined eloquence and philosophy!

In view of the fact that such deep reasoning must be very exhausting, even to such an intellectual giant as he of the Sentinel, would it be anything more than justice for those friends who have him on their hands, to crap it immediately after election and start him up in a taffy shop, so that he may rest his tired brain? A most befitting sign-board might be prepared by painting the words "Taffy and Hypocrisy" in a circle and placing the great man's photograph in the center. E.

What Next.

Ironton, March 17, 1886.

EDITOR JOURNAL.—When the Boyne City people came out and guaranteed us offices, court room, and jail, free of expense to the county. I thought I would vote for the removal of the county seat to Boyne City, and thus help to end the struggle; and when they came down here and offered to build us a bridge and that offer was backed up by a pledge signed by nine supervisors that they would see that it was built at the expense of county, provided Evelyn rolled up a good majority for Boyne City in the coming election, that settled the question with me; and I went to work with a will electioneering my neighbors in favor of Boyne City, and most all of them concluded that it was just what we wanted, and we would go to Dady and Breeden for removal. But the dose they gave us at Advance in mahogany, backed up by such a loafing surveying party and outfit on the following Tuesday, was a bigger dose than we could swallow, and we have all of us, I think to a man, lost entire confidence in the integrity of the Boyne City people, and especially their pledge of county building, and have concluded that it is best to go slow, and vote for leaving the county seat where it is, for a time at least, and thereby save any further expense and taxation. "A bird in the hand is worth two in the bush." East Jordan has come to the front and done all that she has agreed to do, but we have no guarantee that Boyne City will do the same. On the contrary we have very serious doubts on this subject, as she is too much on the sell.

Marion, March 16, 1886.

EDITOR JOURNAL.—I wish you would, through the columns of your paper, enlighten us "moss-backs," as we are called, a little more on this county seat question. In our neighborhood we hardly know how to vote, as the Boyne City people are starting so many reliences to win votes for removal, and every scheme they start proves to be a sham and explodes. I used to take the Sentinel, but since it has turned over and is talking just the opposite from what it did a year ago (evidently under pay of Boyne City), I have got disgusted with it and dropped it, as I know a good many others are going to do, and take your paper. Is there any truth to this railroad yarn? And if so, might there not be some better point on the proposed route for county seat, if we vote to leave it where it is at present? Can the supervisors build a bridge across the Arm without a vote of the people? Are those parties who guarantee county buildings, free of cost to the county, all responsible parties? And would not such a guarantee, supposing the parties are good, be outlawed in less than ten years?

The social and oyster supper at Mr. T. C. Bird's residence, Tuesday evening, under the management of the M. E. Church, was a success.

The Ironton boarders could successfully compete with a fire company, in their expeditious manner of harnessing. From the time the signal was given, "Turn out," until the first team was away for a load of wood just 45 seconds elapsed, and in one minute and a quarter the long procession was filing away to the woods.

VanAnden fill his appointment.

A doctor, with whom it was a settled principle never to speak to a liquor seller, was sent for to visit a saloon-keeper's wife. He paid no attention to the summons, although it was three times repeated. The man then sent word that his wife was so much opposed to his business as the doctor himself, and begged him to come, assuring him he would keep out of sight. The doctor went with alacrity, and the patient was "on her feet again" after two or three visits. The liquor seller waited long for his bill, but none came. Then he sent for it repeatedly, but with no result. One day as the doctor was about to step into his "sulky," a young man thrust a ten dollar bill into his hand, explaining that the liquor seller wished him to keep it all. "Such a look of horror came into the doctor's face," said the young man, "that to-this day I feel as if somebody was murdered right there and I helped to do it."

"I can't touch it—there is blood on it!" cried the doctor, as he threw it away. And yet he was in particular need of money just then for temperance work.

The young man said that the doctor must have been a mile away before he recovered himself enough to search for the bill, and when he found it he took it carefully between his thumb and finger, made to repeat the impression that it was dripping with human blood. In a little over a year the liquor seller closed his store forever. Years afterwards as they lay under the stars one night, the liquor dealer told the doctor that from the day he sent that bill he never took in a piece of money large or small that the words "There is BLOOD on it," did not ring in his ears.

WASHINGTON.

J. Harris Rogers testified in the telephone investigation at Washington that he paid Pan-Electric stock to Richard Winter Smith. At a meeting at which George Harris, Dana, Johnson, Mr. Young and witness were present, Mr. Young said that a number of members of Congress would be more interested in the Pan Electric Company, and had frequently unpractical line on the subject. It was proposed that members of Congress should give $20, but Young suggested that that was too much. Witness testified that no effort was made in 1885, or the beginning of 1886, to have him appointed Director of the House of Representatives, and Senators Harris and Garland had passed no bill which Mr. Young expected to take advantage of the engine, the house, and other machinery to carry on experiments which would benefit both his associates and the Universal. General Johnston wrote to see the Speaker in his behalf. Witness was questioned as to the date of the interview with Johnston. Young stated that Attorney General Garland had promised to bring suit, and had the matter some time early in July. In reply to a question put by the Chairman, witness said that Pan Electric stock was given to his associates for their services. He knew they had official positions and were widely known, because they were lawyers, and because he was satisfied that they would do business honorably.

The Holman committee, appointed to inquire into the expenditure of subscriptions to the Indian relief fund, has made a report to the House. The recommendation was to the effect that a bill should be prepared for the educational Indian children shall be used for the establishment and support of industrial schools; also that the number of agencies be reduced. The minority report recommends the abolishment of the reservation system, and the allotment to each citizen of a tract of land in severalty, the remainder to be sold to actual settlers.

Dr. J. W. Rogers testified before the Telephone Investigating Committee at Washington, March 17, that there was no intention of deriving any advantage from the official positions of the men to whom Pan Electric stock was donated. The object was to back up their excessive reputation. Witness asked to secure the cooperation of men of judgment and of national reputations. Without the assistance of such men the scheme could not be. The incorporators of the Pan Electric Company paid nothing for their stock. Two meetings were held in the room of the Senate Judiciary Committee for the organization of the telephone company. There were Senators Rogers, Jr., Senators Harris and Garland, and Gen. Johnston. At the first meeting a general manager was elected. Senator Garland prepared the papers and submitted them at the second meeting. A charter for a telephone company was obtained in Tennessee, and one for a telegraph company was obtained in New York. There never was any Pan-Electric stock issued. Witness declined that he had no idea when the company was organized that Mr. Garland would be Attorney General, but he had done his best to assist John Minor Botts in securing Cleveland's election. He had dedicated a book to Attorney General Garland, and predicted that Cleveland would select the most able statesman in the country to fill the judiciary of the country. On May 24 he had written to the Attorney General Garland asking him to institute a suit against the Bell company, but received no reply.

Proceedings to disbar Dewitt C. Jones, recently appointed Postmaster at Columbus, Ohio, by the President, for unofficial conduct as an attorney, were begun before the Circuit Court at Columbus. The continuation of Mr. Jones by the Senate has been delayed pending an inquiry into the charges.

The statement comes from Cincinnati that the Democrats contemplate in the Ohio Senate an effort given its sympathy with President Cleveland by refusing to confirm appointments to State offices by Gov. Foraker. It will be remembered that Senator Sherman recently caused the confirmation of DeWitt C. Jones as Postmaster at Columbus to be set aside.

President Cleveland last week sent to the Senate the following nominations: William L. Trenholm, to be Comptroller of the Currency; John H. Ohnty and Charles Lyman, to be members of the Civil Service Commission.

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

Dr. J. W. Rogers testified in the telephone inquiry at Washington, March 18, that he never sold any stock to a member of Congress. He had applied for a consular place, and had written to Attorney General Garland about it. Rogers had also seen the Attorney General in furtherance of the application. Witness said that he had no hard feelings against Mr. Garland, although he thought the Attorney General acted meanly. Witness asked if he had not written several letters directed against the Attorney General, in pamphlet, drawing up a pamphlet: "Issue gotten up this morning from Baltimore. Here it is; want to see it?" The cover of the pamphlet bore the following inscription: "The Great Magicians; Garland, Pan-Electric and the Government Property; To Be Followed by Parthenon; Congressional Whitewash and the Last of the Dog Catcher. By J. W. Rogers of Parthenon Heights. Published by Puck, Boston, Parthenon Heights, Blackmoorby, 188?." CONGRESSIONAL.

The Work of the Senate and House of Representatives.

A BILL to forfeit certain lands to Iowa was passed by the Senate on the 15th. The session was mostly devoted to the speech by Mr Beck in opposition to the Government Telegraph bill. The executive session was devoted to the consideration of a large number of nominations, mostly Postmasters. There was no contest over any of the cases considered, and the nominations were consequently taken up and Mason's case was reported to the House for approval of a bill extending the time for completing his aqueduct contracts. A bill granting a pension of $2,000 per annum to the widow of General Hancock was favorably reported by the Pensions Committee. Mr. Dawes, Representative Senator of Nebraska, asked leave to offer the following resolution and resolution: "Resolved, that whereas we seem to be on the crank; and whereas, the present Congress is an exception to the rule, and whereas, it should not be in the power of no blat, insane and crazy, and whereas, Congress is adjourning, therefore, Resolved, that the Senate, from rules of this House, be go, and that it shall receive at least two votes to object to the consideration of a bill." The resolution was laid over. The conference report on the Mexican Pension bill was adopted, after it was proved that it was the second that the House had agreed to. The Senate then adjourned.

Yesterday (Tuesday) the Senate resumed the consideration of the Interstate Commerce bill, the question being on the amendment of Senator Cockrell, which provides that the provisions of the act to regulate commerce shall not be construed to prohibit any common carrier from charging and receiving a greater compensation for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line in the same direction, when the shorter distance is within the territory where there is no water competition, and when the longer distance is beyond such territory. The amendment was adopted. The Senate then proceeded to consider the bill to provide for the ascertainment of the boundaries of the Indian Territory, and for the opening of the same to settlement, when Mr. Ingalls called the compliment was a just one, and he was sorry that it was not deserved. He had been in close relation with the Interior Department, and had found it a good one. He had never seen a committee more anxious to do the right thing than the Indian Committee and all the members of it had been most considerate of the interests of the Indian nations. The bill was then passed, so that the country can judge whether it was a compliment or not. The Senate then proceeded to the consideration of the bill to provide for the ascertainment of claims to the Government formerly flowing of the fifth of the Chickasaw Nation, and to provide for the final settlement of the claims, pending and offered for hearing Nay Wack, providing that the pensions, which shall be paid to the Indians, shall continue during the existence of such tribes, or nations." The Senate then adjourned.

The bill to increase the pensions of soldiers and sailors and their widows, passed by a month passed the Senate on the 16th inst., just as it came from the House. Senators Sherman, Collom, Maxey and Ingalls, sides of the Senate, spoke in favor of the bill, and Senators Cockrell and Beck opposed it. The beneficiaries in a very large sense, the pensioners of the war, and the widows and orphans of the war. The refusal of the Senate to concur in the House bill, which provided for a pension to the widow of General Hancock, and the refusal of the Senate to insure, into the revenue, a tax of the Pacific Telegraph Company, and the refusal of the Senate to pass the Government Telegraph bill, and that the committee have reported a bill providing for the ascertainment of claims to the Government formerly flowing of the fifth of the Chickasaw Nation, and to provide for the final settlement of the claims, pending and offered for hearing Nay Wack, providing that the pensions, which shall be paid to the Indians, shall continue during the existence of such tribes, or nations." THE JOURNAL.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

The County Seat Question.

In answer to the question of our Marion correspondent last week as to the responsibility of the parties who guarantee free county buildings, we will say we have little faith in the pledge. If they really intended to furnish free county offices, they would have begun to erect a good substantial town hall last summer just as soon as the resolution submitting the removal to the people was passed; and would have it now completed, so as to say to the voters: Here is a building, gentlemen, sufficient for your use for several years; come and occupy it if you will, free of cost. Such a course would have gained them two or three hundred votes, and it would have been something tangible,—a guarantee of itself. There is good reason to believe that they will not furnish a building, for if they get the county seat without, they can say: The county seat is where you put it yourselves; now furnish your own buildings. And when it comes to building county buildings, who will build them? The last board of supervisors equalized the assessed valuation of the six western townships of Charlevoix, Eveline, Hayes, Marion, Norwood, and South Arm at $1,380,195, and the eight eastern town (supposed to be most benefited by a removal to Boyne City) at $889,002,—assuming that Wilson is neutral, being equally accommodated at either location. The committee on apportionment recommended a tax for county purposes on the six western townships of $6,900.06; while for the eight eastern townships it was only $4,445.55. Of this tax the amounts returned delinquent become an important consideration, as showing who pay the burdens of taxation, and who let them go by default. We have not the figures for this year, but for last year the eight eastern towns returned $4,867.99, while the six western towns returned only $2,068.68. Those who pay the taxes to support the county should consider these things, and determine if they are now ready to settle the question of permanent location and begin the erection of buildings.

THE JOURNAL has not changed its mind, as stated in the last Statesman. After the positive denial from president Hugart, as published in the Sentinel last fall, we were loth to believe the company were now beginning town tide operations for the speedy building of the road. We have satisfactory assurance that the agreement mentioned last November was entered into just as we stated, although denied by president Hugart, and we would be very glad to believe that this survey (?) was the beginning of that contract. When convinced that it is, we shall be glad to publish the evidence.

One of the reasons advanced for removing the county seat to Boyne City is that East Jordan is a lively commercial rival of Charlevix, while Boyne City is not, and never can be, so that whatever of prestige the county-seat carries is to be taken away from an already lively town, and given to another town where it can never grow to such proportions as to become dangerous to Charlevoix. Pretty thin reasoning.

The Sentinel devotes a column and a quarter to an evasion of the question whether or not it left out of its copy of president Hughart's letter a very important paragraph. Say Smith, why don't you come out like a little man, and own up though your paper, as you admit to your friends, that you made a mistake,—first in publishing with such a flourish president Hughart's denial last fall, and second in leaving out a portion of his last letter.

A gentleman from Boyne City, a lawyer by profession, and a persistent and determined agitator of the removal of the county seat, has said that this is his last campaign. If not carried this year, the cause is hopeless, and he will pack his books and go to East Jordan, so as to live at the county seat.

To enable the readers of the JOURNAL to intelligently consider the county-seat question in its relation to the future greatest good to the greatest number, we print below a tabular statement, by townships, of population in 1874, 1880, and 1884, with the percent of increase from 1880 to 1884, and the total vote at the last election:

Gnawing the Nubbin.

Among the innumerable things one notices while traveling, none are quicker than the sight of Americans eating their tar-footed native vegetable. At one hotel table we saw a red-faced man of heavy frame and features, with shaggy eyebrows and grizzled mustache, ferociously attack an ear of corn, as if it was a premeditated act of vengeance. Holding it in both hands, he rapidly ate from end to end of the ear without a pause, beginning over again on the next row until the whole was methodically and effectually polished. His nose, chin, jaws, mustache and eyebrows vigorously worked in unison like a piece of connected, patent machinery, warranted to crush a large amount of kernels in a short space of time. He was very concentrate, yet unconscious of the ridiculous spectacle presented, like hundreds of others who adopt the same voracious method. The most surprising part of the picture was his beautiful wife, whose personal appearance and elegant table manners indicated extreme refinement and delicacy. With her reddish gold hair coiled high on her head, her pretty features and complexion, her dress of pale blue India silk under a pointoise of real and rare waste lace, diamonds blazing in her ears, and on her white neck and hands, she was a striking contrast to the man who sat beside her, fiercely grinding corn and piling up layers of cobs on the table cover. If this, with many other table offenses be naturally perpetrated as the meal proceeded, disturbed the sensibilities of the lady, she concealed any outward sign of it beneath a cool composure and apparent indifference that showed a remarkable power of self-command. Such women are capable of heroisms if their capacities were directed into higher channels. But would any number of Paris dresses, any amount of real lace and diamonds, induce you, Helen, to spend your life with a man who ate corn on the cobb like that? I think not, even if he lavished Robinours and steam-yachts upon you beside.—Hartford Times.

Guizot's France

CELEBRATED HISTORY OF FRANCE from the Earliest Times to 1878. By M. GUIZOT, Prime Minister of France, continued from his notes, by his daughter, MME. GUIZOT DE WITT. Complete in 8 vols. large 12mo., bound elegantly in fine cloth, gilt tops. A new edition just issued, reduced in price to $6.00, including postage. This is much the best edition published of this magnificent work, which is known as the best popular history of France. The cost of the imported edition, with substantially the same illustrations is $36.00, while this is certainly the best in form, and the most desirable for the library.

$36 Reduced to $6

427 Fine Illustrations

GUIZOT'S BRILLIANT style, his graphic descriptions of men and events, his painstaking minuteness of detail, the lucidity and ease of his style and the admirable philosophic reflections, all combine to render it worthy of the description it bears as the most popular history of France. It is as fascinating as a novel, and as life-like as a theatrical representation of the events and personages it describes. How the set can be sold for that price remains, after much reflection, a mystery, for the work is not sham work, it is well done; altogether it is a marvel of cheapness. Mr. Alden has done much for the cause of good literature, but nothing better than this."—Daily Times, Buffalo, N.Y.

"What VICTOR HUGO is in fiction, Cousin in philosophy, Guizot is in history. Among Frenchmen he had but few peers."—Christian Leader, Boston, Mass. "IT IS FAR THE best history of France that has been written. It is a wonder of cheapness."—Christian Advocate, Richmond, Va. "SUCH A HISTORY, by such a writer, and at such a price, should gain readers by the thousand."—Churchman, Richmond, Va. LOVE'S LESSON.

BY NINIAN MUSGRAGE.

Oh! yesterday, in a willful mood,
Young Love came over the hill;
The faded flowers in Nature's wood
Lay silvery white and still.

The gales were chased from the wall was low,
So Love sprang lightly over,
And I felt down from the wings of snow
A hundred darts or more.

"I'll take two glances, every one!"
He whispered, with roguish glee;
And you, proud Rose, are his mistress's sun,
Shall yield your heart to me.

I heard—yes laughed at the Wild's entrance,
Yet, when he was gone, I found
And shrugged up your leaves, with a dainty grace,
Where the pleading Raindrops came.

And yesterday I scoffed at the power of Love!
He picked up his darts and flew
And off left, no one could move,
To a sun, and pleased their hearts

And then, in a dimpling, careless way,
He tightened his trusty bow,
And Love's sweet Spirit, I ween, I ween,
Dashed over his wings of snow.

A moment more, and the arrow speed,
"Ha, ha! sweet bow, don't yield?"
Sent to my heart the dropping bead,
And knew the power I wield.

"Love conquers all." But there he stopped,
For on his thrilling brow
The fairer face I had kissed dropped!
What need to tell the rest?

Of how I became a slave to a King,
Of how a slave he lives?
Ask this his heart to a willing sing,
"Love asketh not—but gives."

"POT-BOILERS."

CHAPTER I.

Bilge!!

Nothing else would have matched mud much, but he was blind—hopelessly blind.

He was an artist and had caught cold while out sketching. Inflammation had set in—gone to his eyes, and it was as if a dead wall had been built right across his path of life.

Ten years like it might have unsettled him, for the clinging mud has been "out of hand," but now, with six of them—the third but nineteen and only a girl; the youngest seven—and no provision, it was a black look-out, indeed.

For I think Lloyd was not a genius. He had not such modesty, which does almost as well. He painted very nice pictures, true to nature; but was on earth satisfied with nature? One might as well offer people unsoiled meat.

Christmas came, and the lonely money was gone. There were some pictures in the studio, but not very finished, however, finished or not, they must go. They packed them up, and sent them to Mr. Lloyd's picture dealer, with a note to say they would be willing to take a low price, as the pictures were unframed, and they were the last they would ever be able to send—in touch of tragedy Janet thought they would feel. She added she would be happy to send some of her own drawings for their approval, and to hand their orders with the calm confidence of one who has not the faintest idea of the struggle for existence.

Incredible! impossible! It couldn't be true.

"Messrs. Pink & Sons are returning the "Westland Sons" and the "Morning Walk," by Mr. Charles Lloyd, as they are sorry to say the pictures are unsuitable in their present condition. They also beg to inform Miss Lloyd that they are unable at present to send her an order, as trade is very bad, and they have a large stock on hand."

Janet sat stupefied, with the letter in her hand. "Mother, the pictures are coming back! Pinks won't have them. What in the world are we to do?"

"Won't have them? Whatever do they mean?"

"I don't know; oh, I don't know—it's dreadful—it's dreadful to think off" and she started up distracted.

Jack was kneeling on a chair, his elbows well on the table, and a newspaper before him. "Don't run away, Jenny; stop a minute. There's something here. Listen. 'To Artists—Wanted: Pictures for exportation. Price must be moderate. Apply, Moses & Co., Bermondsey.'"

"Oh, Jack, let me see—how providential! What a magnificent opening. Why, they'll want dozens. Let's write at once; or perhaps we had better go, and then we can see them and get the order all about it, and buy the canvases and things. The reaction was tremendous. Janet felt abundantly happy.

"But, my dear, it's hardly the thing."

"Oh! with Jack it will be all right, mother; besides we shall must; we have to mind 'the thing' any more."

So Janet and Jack went, and they found "the thing;" then they turned out of that, and up a court found "Moses & Co."

Talk about the improvement of taste! Whoever will buy all the tea trays, wax flowers, gaudy china-pieces which these warehouses contain is a puzzle.

They were ushered into a little back office to interview the buyer.

"Pictures?" said he shortly. "Yes; well, I'll just look at them. I can tell at a glance whether they will do for us." He seemed very rude and abrupt; but if they had only known how tired the poor man was of pictures!

"There," said Janet, picking out two of her father's, and putting them up with some pride—they were so infinitely better than those in the room.

They all looked at them a minute—the man doubtless left in indecision. At last the girl looked round smiling, but there was no admiration to be seen; the man merely screwed up his eye and shook his head.

"Presently he looked up, one of his own sketches—the worst a long way. "This might do; only it would want a deal more work in it."

"Certainly," she said anxiously. "I could put any amount of work into it. I don't mind work."

"Don't you? Then I dare say we shall come to terms. You must throw a bridge across the river."

"But there wasn't one."

"That doesn't matter; and you must put an old woman in a scarlet cloak in the foreground. Our customers like a bit of life; and the canvas wants covering. There's too much sky; they like it well filled up—plenty for the money. You might put a range of mountains in the background; it would be a great improvement, would a mountain or two. What's your price?"

"I thought three guineas," she said, not liking to ask too much.

"It is a shame to be had. "Forty-eight shillings is our price, and we never give a penny more to anybody."

The sister and brother looked anxiously at each other, but forty-eight shillings was better than nothing; it was rather a queer price, though.

"You find your own canvases?" said the man sharply.

"Of course."

"You had better sign them—not your own name, of course; besides, a lady's name wouldn't do. Sign them—; let me see, our last man signed himself Montague Winter; suppose you call yourself Matthew —ean, Mark Blake; no, perhaps Blake would hardly do just after White. Say—or—Barrett—Mark Barrett. Don't forget, and bring one in next week; forty-eight shillings, and find your own canvases."

"You want more than one, then? It is hardly the thing to do the same subject twice."

The man looked horrified at such unreasonable idea. "Its a shame! I'm ordering just for a sample—forty-eight mgs a dozen! and if I like them, you'll have to do dozens and dozens all alike."

"Oh!"

CHAPTER II

March. Haverstock Hill. "Show days" among the artists. Carriages, critics, and well-dressed people going from studio to studio.

A young young A. R. A., Mark Barrett, was looking at his own pictures before the arrival of his visitors, with that "divine discontent" which, unfortunately, is not very common among inflated young artists.

Some hinks came in—people he knew quite well and had sent cards to, but he couldn't for the life of him remember their names. He tried to make up for it in "gush." "So glad to see you. How kind of you to come."

"Not at all, delighted! Dear, dear, how very nice!" and the elder lady put up her glasses. "What a very fine picture. Worthy of Millais, I declare!"

Mark Barrett was red, not with graful, ection—it was a portrait of a provincial mayor, and he had not put his best work into it, as he could have done.

More people came in; among others, some friends of the mayor. "How do you do, Mr. Barrett? My happy to meet you again, sir. You lost in our council chamber. You remember me; Mr. Alderman Whitby, sir. Now let's have a look at our worthy mayor. Very good, very good; just like him, isn't it, my dear?" turning to his wife. "Eh?"

"Well, it is like him in the face," said the little woman, doubtfully; "but I think myself the unnatural bottom are a trifle too small."

"So they are, so they are. Trust a woman for telling you your faults, Mr. Barrett, eh?"

A city man came up to him. "I only have picked up one of your pictures for a trifle, I regret to say, Mr. Barrett; it is a bold, cheerful voice, as if it was a good thing that struck Mark. Those are the pictures were unnatural, and they were the last they would ever be able to send—a touch of tragedy Janet thought they would feel. She added she would be happy to send some of her own drawings for their approval, and to hand their orders with the calm confidence of one who has not the faintest idea of the struggle for existence.

Incredible! impossible! It couldn't be true.

"It is a shame to be had. "Forty-eight shillings is our price, and we never give a penny more to anybody."

The sister and brother looked anxiously at each other, but forty-eight shillings was breach of promise case. The very thought made him stern.

"I will not apologize for my intrusion," he said; "for I have no doubt you have some idea of the cause of my visit."

Janet, who would have broken down at a word, resented this unjust harshness.

"Perhaps you will be good enough to explain. I am not aware that I have done anything so very wrong."

Jack felt very angry. He was longing to defend his sister, but couldn't think of a telling speech. "Oh! to be a man—cool, self-possessed man."

"And done anything wrong, do you say, madam? Are you, then, so ignorant of right and wrong as not to know that you have committed the grossest forgery? Don't you know that it is criminal?"

The sister and brother looked at each other, not very clever as to what "actionable" meant. An idea flashed upon Jack. "Can't mean to say you are going to send any sister to prison, because it wasn't her that did it: it was me," he said, eagerly.

"No, no, Jack; that won't do. It was I, sir, trying pencils and contemptuously to Mark. "If you refer to my having signed what I suppose is your name. It is fortunate that I did not happen to sign 'John Brown,' or I might have had a bolder forgery put upon me instead of one."

"If you had signed your pictures"—sarcastic emphasis and wave of the hand toward the twelve—"John Brown" it would have been noticed very little, as that is not a well-known name."

"Indeed!"

"In the art world, I was about to add," frosty. "Do you happen that we make it rather well known, as no doubt you are aware."

"Indeed! I never had the pleasure of hearing it before."

"Indeed!" He really was surprised, and not much flattered.

"No, really, isn't it surprising" said Jack readily—his clumsy way of defending his sister.

Mark colored up, but he was obliged to accept the extinguisher. He couldn't explain what a great man he was from an artist's point of view.

"Well," said he, willing to be magnanimous, "since the offence has been committed in ignorance, I will not prosecute this time, of conditions that you must obliterate all these"—pointing to the twelve names—"and call it all the—er—pseudonym you can possibly get hold of and assign them."

Jack whistled. "Think of Moses!" he suggested.

"I don't suppose the people who buy them will like that," said Janet. "They've got a trade for Moses and Son, and I don't know what to do. Whatever shall we do, Jack?"

There was a despairing ring about the voice that struck Mark. He turned to him again. "If you would just let us send off the pictures as we originally intended, I would give you a guinea."

"Not another picture! You have done me incalculable injury already."

"I'm very sorry. Will you wait just a minute? I should like to consult my father. He was a pious man, and I know he would be distressed at such a thing as my being a forger."

"You are mistaken. I never did such a thing as my life."

"Put down your name on it. I'm perfectly certain."

"What were they asking for it?"

"Forty-eight shillings."

"You must be mistaken," in deep disgust.

"Very well; if you don't believe me you can wait for yourself. I have the address in my pocket."

Mark was so much amazed that he never saw he made a pilgrimage to the city. He determined to get to the bottom of the mystery. Most likely it was a mania; was something like his; but it might be a forgery, in which case he would have the fellow punished. He found the picture-dealer—at least, it wasn't a picture-dealer, it was a draper's—and there, sure enough, among sheetings and rubbish of all sorts, were three pictures, fearfully dirty, signed "Mark Barrett."

However, the shopman directed him to Moses & Co., Bermondsey.

He hurried on there; it was dinner-time, between twelve and one; only a boy in charge.

That was fortunate; he got the address without being seen. It was Mark Lane, Cottage-Houses, Surrey.

A romantic idea of. What pale lines, women are!

CHAPTER III.

"Now, Jack, I'll put in the bridges while you fathom with the old woman. We must hurry along. If we don't get these off to-night we shall be late, and I'm fearful to-morrow."

"Well, never mind, Jimmy; don't let's worry more than we can help. Do you think this old woman will do?"

"Yes—see yet plenty of color on and smooth it down well. Whatever would the public do without 'Mark Barrett' painting all arts? I do hate calling myself 'Mark Barrett,' signing the name in preference as the door opened.

She didn't turn round—she was too busy—until their little servant said, "Mr. Mark Barrett, please, mim."

Poor, white, over-strung Jane dropped her palette "bang-ashes" down on the only decent carpet in the house as she turned, brave-eyed, to face a gentleman—as Mark Barrett in the flesh. Curly-haired and blue-eyed certainly, but fearnought. She simply could not speak for a moment.

Even Jack was speechless. He turned very red and tried to stand in front of the pictures with the name on, lest as there was a bit of red about them, they might be beyond his powers.

Mark had come straight down from London in a furious rage. Every "pot-boiler" he had seen of poor Janet's only made him more angry.

He marched into the house as soon as the door was opened; it was quite possible such a person as that might lack him out of the window, if he waited to be asked. The sooner he showed him the very worst side the fingers and were going on.

"Well, little girl, you seem delighted to see me," he said, sarcastically. "Perhaps you know who I am, and what I have come for. Let me see, as we are alone, you may as well take off your mask."

"I'm at a loss to know what you mean."

"You don't, eh? Well, I'm sorry to be obliged to remind you of the name of Mark Barrett."

"Mark Barrett! Do you—do you—do you—"

"Yes, I do, and I know all about the forgery. Let me see, our last man signed himself Montague Winter; suppose you call yourself Matthew —ean, Mark Blake; no, perhaps Blake would hardly do just after White. Say—or—Barrett—Mark Barrett. The sister and brother looked anxiously at each other, but forty-eight shillings was stand out in his life when he held Janet's nervous hand in his for a second, and she glowed up at him with proud shame.

For ranged along the wall were twelve more pictures, exactly like the others—twelve ranges of mountains, twelve bridges, now in course of construction, and twelve old women awaiting their scarlet cloaks.

"Still here, I see, Miss Lloyd."

"She's always busy," said her father, with sigh. "I do wish she could get out a little more—not only for the sake of the fresh air, but I am sure if she does not get more sketching from nature her work will deteriorate."

"Mr. Barrett will tell you that that is impossible, father," said Janet, half in fun, half in earnest.

Mark colored a little. He could not deny that it was impossible for anything in the painting line to be much worse; but he caught a faint little sigh from Janet, and Jack looked out of the window with longing eyes.

"It's a jolly afternoon," he said. "I say, Jenny, don't you think we might drop it for once? There'll be such a breeze on Hyde Hill."

Janet gave him a look. "We'll see when we have done our work, Jack."

Sighing not a little, but prodigiously, Jack took up the brush again. "That never," he said. "Those ranges will take ages."

Mark hesitated a minute before he descended to the bottom of the professional ladder. "If you will allow me to help you," he said presently, "I think we might finish in time for a walk before dark. I can very easily do two Rippler Hill myself, and your father was kind enough to say you would show me the way," looking at Jack. "If Miss Lloyd would show me the place are of accompanying you," looking at Janet.

"We shall be most happy," she said; "but I cannot think of troubling you with these. I have set Jack and I can finish in one or three hours."

"But I enjoy painting, and I have nothing in the world to do this afternoon. Here, Jack, lend me a palette. I'll go on with the trees."

A month or two ago Mark wouldn't have believed it if he had seen himself now, diligently working in trees for the dozens, trying to ingratiate himself with an ancient gossip and sunpowering for a look from a "human forgeter."

The little maid brought them in some tea, and they worked away closely—Mr. Lloyd looking in now and then, enjoying the work done in the house.

When the sun was beginning visibly to sink, and the last old woman was fixed with her red cloak, the young people got ready for Cair walk.

Jained, from some undefinable instinct, put on her best bonnet, thinking to be means her newest, but, and plucked some early geranium for her neck, which turned bright against her black dress and pale face.

But not so pale. As they stood on Hyde Hill, watching the sun sinking on the horizon, long out of sight from the valley, the rich tints of the red and golden wrapped the girl in a halo of glory. Mark looked at her with a strange feeling—thought the artist, entranced with the effect. He was by no means sentimental, but he thought her so, which, was enough, to make him—for Janet not sure.

Jack had some a time helped his sister to lay the sorry school Ripley Hill. He was going to do his own, of course (even the lapse of twenty years not quite "up" where their sisters are concerned); but Mr. Barrett happened to be nearer, and offered his hand, and, though Jack was a shy boy, there was, stronger to say something strong, in his manner, and direct, and this grasp.

The mother, dulled perhaps by her troubles, was vexed with her daughter about this time. She was unreasonable. She actually cried—not openly, but quietly and unseen, as she hoped—because she could not have a new gown, and Janet was foolish enough to spend a shilling on ribbons, which might have been much more profitably spent on stockings.

But Janet's instinct was right. Though nothing on earth will render souls that are dull firmly built, the mental frills will turn out fresh and pretty, if the mind, after its natural, healthy instinct, and to its attainment, by any one would if they would but think.

The day it dawned even upon Jack, brain-by understanding that Janet was different, somehow, and it wasn't only the geranium in her dress and ribbon at her bonnet.

They were painting as usual, and, as was their custom, unusual, Mr. Barrett was helping them, when the door bell sounded, and Jack took up the brush again.

"You've been an awfully good friend to us, Mr. Barrett, especially to dunce and no—getting on orders and that; but there's one thing you've done that I don't believe anybody noticed but me, and that is, you've made a great alteration in Jenny."

"Nonsense, Jack, nothing of the kind," she hand in, horrified as to what he would say next, her face glowed as red as the geraniums.

"Jack, standing by her, looked down on her, let his lip, and began to wish Jack would go out of the room.

"I know what I'm talking about," said Jack, with the calm confidence of ignorance, and blundering like a big blunderbuss. "She's as happy and cheerful as anything now, and I know she was, because she so disappointed when you don't come."

"Jack, be quiet—it's all nonsense. Don't be silly."

She was very down at first about the name, you know, and Moses was very mad with her for spoiling the wonderful sign "Mark Barrett" over same."

"Jack, be quiet, I shouldn't think of such a thing," she burst in passionately, "after all you said." turning to Mark. "You may be sure I shall never make use of your name."

"Won't you?" he returned. "Do you know, I was rather beginning to hope you would."

"Indeed!"

THE HAPPINESS OF ELYSIUM.

Elysium was the name given by the ancient Greeks to the resting place of the righteous dead, where they should enjoy moral peace and happiness. None but the pure in heart, the truthful and generous could tread the asphodel meadows of the Elysian fields, and it was a land of everlasting delight. What, therefore, Hades, the demons of Stygian, Ill., said recently, which of course the spirit knows, which of course the great good fortune and to all come to her. And such, indeed, was the truth. Mrs. Sherman tells how it was:

"I have suffered from bilious attacks, for more than thirty years, and the pain would sometimes be the sickness of but not suppose it is needed to save all his breath. But he'll break every tooth out of it if he uses it for that purpose.—Marrieta.

Around the County.

The Proposed Location Discussed.

East Jordan, March 22, 1886.

EDITOR JOURNAL.—The Sentinel man is as unfortunate in his mapping ability as in his ability to state the truth in any other way on the county seat question. When he writes upon it, he writes much that is either vague hyperbole or naked lie, and his map of Boyne City, published last week, is of the character of his writings, and got up specially to deceive, as any one may learn by examining the plats on record. Boyne City with its additions, or what is officially called South Boyne, extends to nearly the south line of section 25, whereas, but 1 is bounded on the north by the north line of that section, making nearly a mile as the bird flies and much more by the lake shore. If the Sentinel map means anything, it means that the part colored black is the place where they wish to locate the county building. Now, Mr. Editor, that is in the swamp to the north of the village plat. It has not been platted, as the record will show; nor have the blocks that the Sentinel's map shows to the north and northwest of that been platted. The Sentinel does not say which of those black spots is the spot; it is then perhaps most fair to measure by what is marked out as a street to run between them, and measured by that street it would be nearly seventy rods north of the river, while the center of the village is a long way to the south of it. The facts are that but a very little lot 1 is platted; that there are but few inhabitants upon it, and it is not probable that there will be, because the village has grown southward instead of northward. It is owned by a man living in another part of the state who has not identified himself with the interests of this county, but from all accounts, he, with a few others, have been stirring up this county-seat quarrel for years, and trying to create the ill feeling which the Sentinel man hypocritically professes to deplore.

The Sentinel's map has an arrow on it. Arrows on maps invariably point north, as everybody knows, but the Sentinel's points east. Is this more deception or is it stupidity?

But the real question is, why should we move the county seat? It is now nearer the center of population and center of business than it would be if moved to the place shown on the map. Nearly all the official business and litigation arises in the western and southwestern part of the county, which can more easily reach this place than Boyne City. It is now costing the county nothing. It is now in the hands of the people, and they can call up the question at any time and vote upon it when a railroad through the county shall determine where the proper place for the county seat is. Whereas, if moved, it will be in the hands of the supervisors, from the sparsely settled eastern end of the county whom the Boyne City managers profess to be carrying around in their vest pockets. B.

Boyne City.

Boyne City, March 22, 1886.

EDITOR JOURNAL.—I observe that there a considerable misunderstanding on the part of many people in Charlevoix county, relative to the eligibility of the site proposed for the county buildings in Boyne City, whenever the county may see fit to build them, should the county seat be removed to this place. The proposed site is on a terrace two and one half blocks distant from the lake, its minimum elevation being six feet above the lake, extending, with a gradual rise to the east, to a maximum elevation of from fifteen to twenty feet. Its drainage is natural and is excelled in this respect by no other site that might be selected for this purpose in the county. Not only is this true, but the two principal streets of the village for business and for residences, are laid out so as to pass parallel between this terrace and the lake, and though much lower than the terrace, are as eligible for building as could be desired. I don't see what's the use of girls signing the pledge and joining temperance societies and such things," said pretty Minnie Proctor the other day, as she tossed back her head and seated herself at the piano. "Girls never drink, anyway; it's only men and rough boys."

"Guess your education's been neglected in that direction, Min," said her brother Harry. "Girls ought to sign the pledge if for nothing else than to help them keep from offering wine to callers on New Year's day! Lots of 'em either drink, or help to make men drink, and I guess they need a pledge as much as men and boys do."

"Oh, well, I suppose some of the rich ones do, where they have wine in the house all the time," returned Minnie, "but we don't have it. What do I want to sign the pledge for?"

"The time may come when you'll need it as much as Harry over will," said Uncle Fred looking up from his paper. "I am not sure but that women are in almost as much danger now-a-days as men. I've just been reading something to the point in the morning paper. Listen:

"Yesterday morning about 2 o'clock, a drunken woman was found half-dead in the refuse race near the gas works. She was under the influence of liquor and had fallen into the ditch while walking about looking for more of the stuff."

"Even though you may never be tempted to drink or to put the cup to the lips of another," continued Uncle Fred, "you ought to put your name to the pledge. It might influence some one else to do the same thing, who would otherwise yield some day to temptation, and get as low as this drunken woman who lay in the ditch yesterday morning. Don't always think of yourself, when such matters come before you. Learn to act for the good of others."

Minnie Proctor's name looked up from the pledge after that day, sending out its influence in favor of total abstinence. Did you ever think, girls, how much it may mean just to have your name written where it will cast great influence for good?—W. N. B. in the Royal Road.

The basis of a settlement of the strike on the Missouri Pacific lines has been made by Governor Marmaduke, of Missouri, and Governor Martin, of Kansas, and accepted by Vice-President Hoxie, who is expected to the Knights of Labor of St. Louis. The latter adopted resolutions assuring that the corporations of the country are acting in concert to break down the power of labor organizations, and thereby run the country. Cut the school of representatives of corporations to treat with the representatives of labor is a silly solution, fraught with ruin to all trades-unionists and labor organizations in the head to make it a demand for recognition of their representatives and their right to negotiate, treat, and deal with individuals or leaders, as the case may be. The Knights have appealed to the public, closing as follows:

Did you shoot at an enemy? If Mr. Hoxie did so I know that he was guilty of poor venue and inconsiderate. Would he soften his heart, our wishes and hear our appeal for redress? We would be the happiest hearted people in these cold and inhospitable. We should be happy if Mr. Hoxie would be so good as to place the matter before a competent medical specialist and order little Hoxie out of the controversy. The little is simply Hoxie. Mr. Hoxie wants to call. He was provoked at. He is still hoping it and would like to meet public opinion. Only 35 and 40 cents. How long will the public consent to be fooled? Are we a people or cattle? We want to know.

A Kansas City dispatch says: At 9 o'clock this morning 6,000 men and something of locomotives whistles signaled the inauguration of another strike. At that hour the union switchmen in every railroad yard in the city quit work, and freight business generally was stopped. Business at the stock yards is about suspended, and on the Board of Trade what dropped this morning in as many seconds. At present the strike is confined to the Missouri, Kansas, and Texas. At the last, advices, "The leaders from the headquarters of the Knights of Labor." The switchmen made a general demand for an advance in wages a week ago of the various roads, and it was granted."

No man had ever said a word that could be construed into an intention to do anything contrary to Improper. Van Buskirk was called as a witness by the defense and Garland became angry and called back to the witness-stand. Garland was a member of his company, he claimed, and witness would not dare to lie. Young referred to Dr. Rogers' statement of the conversation in which witness was reported as saying that Attorney General Garland had consented to bring suit against the Bell Company. He asserted that the doctor had been in error as to the conversation. "I am positive that I never told Rogers that Attorney General Garland had agreed to bring suit against the Bell Company to annul their patents," said Mr. Young, emphatically.

Mr. Van Buskirk wrote to witness that he was going to have a government suit brought to be confounded the law, whether Mr. Garland is belonged to the company or not. He was going to make Mr. Garland bring suit, he said. If Mr. Garland offered to do it he would go to the President about it. Subsequently witness took Mr. Van Buskirk to Garland's office and introduced him to Mr. Garland. He then wrote a letter

The County Seat.

Voters of Charlevoix county, consider well what you are doing in casting your ballots next Monday. The object in designating a place at which the people are to do the official business of the county is that all may know where to go to find the officers with whom the business is to be transacted. All will admit that as yet this county is but partially developed and settled, and the county seat should be located at a place most accessible to the greater number, when the county is fully developed. This is a question which the legislature has left in the hands of the people, if they will exercise it. It has been intimated in the discussions of this question, both private and public that there are nine supervisors of this county who, (being a majority of the board,) have promised to exercise their power to erect bridges, build county buildings and divide townships, if the people will entrust them with the county seat at Bayne City. We need remember that the same nine supervisors who promise these things have the power to retain the county seat at Bayne City no matter what the interests of the majority of the people may demand after the commercial interests of the county are fully developed. Do the people of this county desire to be dictated to in this important matter by only nine men of this county, or will they keep this matter in their own hands so that they may control it themselves, and be able to vote upon the question again if their interests demand it? While the county seat remains at East Jordan it may be removed if the people so desire, but if once located at Bayne City, it cannot, for the reason that it takes two thirds of the supervisors to submit the question to the people and not merely a majority, so that the nine have the power against the whole people.

Most of the people are aware that two or three lines of railroad are counting toward this locality. That these waters and harbors of ours are being looked upon with a view of, in the future, connecting their lines with boats and the shipping interests of this county. These roads may come from the south or from the east. They may come into the western portion, the eastern portion or the southern portion of the county, and in either event who can say at the present time what influence it may have upon that portion of the county through which it may pass. Supposing a road should come from the east, crossing the G. R. & I. R. R. at Bayne Falls or at some point between there and Elmira, running from there to East Jordan (admitted by all to be a very practical route) Ironton, Charlevoix, and Elk Rapids, where then would be the proper location of the county seat? Would the people desire to have nine supervisors dictate them and say they shall go to Bayne City to do their county business? If a road should happen to come to Ironton, Charlevoix, etc., by way of Bayne City, then Bayne City might be easily reached and accessible, no more so however, than Bayne Falls, Advance, Ironton, or Charlevoix. But supposing the road should come from the southern or western portion of the county, might not the population be so changed that the interests of a greater number of the people be addressed by having the seat of justice at a point further west, than at Bayne City. Or, may not the county so develope than other points on Pine Lake or South Arm not yet thought of by the future metropolis of the county and the interests of the whole people demand the county business to be done there. After considering these points, will you trust this matter to the whole people or to the nine supervisors.

In this issue of the JOURNAL will be found communications on various sides of the removal question,—a few words not found in any other paper in the county. And in permitting their insertion, we do not necessarily endorse the opinions expressed. One of the reasons leading to the establishment of the JOURNAL was that no one could have a fair hearing in opposition to the editor of the Sentinel. Extremely that evil was one of the promises we made to the projectors of the enterprise, and no amount of prosperity will cause us to forget that promise.

And in this connection, it is amusing to see the strange companionship visible on our streets everyday. Men who have for years been political (and even personal) enemies, now go along the street arm in arm.

We print in another column, a communication from Mr. Wm. Harris of Norwood, which is bristling with facts and figures that cannot be disproved. Mr. Harris has evidently given this matter careful study, and his conclusions, based upon his experience and extensive knowledge of the affairs of the county, cannot fail to influence all conscientious voters. We understand that the substance of the article was sent to the Sentinel last week, and refused publication,—evidently because the conclusions did not correspond with those of the editor. Our neighbor seems afraid to have the whole truth presented to the people, lest they shall in their wisdom, vote against him, and his apparent influence shall be forever destroyed.

"Bro. Strang, of the Charlevoix JOURNAL, is trying to execute the difficult feat of 'sitting straddle' on the county-seat question which is tearing up Charlevoix county just now. Bad policy, Bro. Strang! you'll get curses from both sides and make friends of neither."—Petoskey Record. Mistaken again. The JOURNAL is simply carrying out its established policy of considering public questions with fairness, and without prejudice or blackguardism.

"That Circular,"

As printed in the Sentinel, proves nothing beyond the fact that the friends of Bayne City are in deeper straits, and will resort to any falsehood to carry their point. The following affidavits of men charged with circulating the circular have been obtained to prove the falsity of the statement and the complete refutation of the charge could be shown if all the parties mentioned could have been reached in time for this issue.

Having read with some surprise the statement made in the Sentinel of March 31, inst., charging myself and Mr. Cook with having distributed the certain circulars in Bayne City, and that we carried 500 copies to that town for distribution and placed them in the hands of Dr. E. P. Allen for that purpose, therefore, for the purpose of denying this falsehood, I, said E. P. Fogg of East Jordan, do solemnly swear that the statement made in the said Sentinel is in good faith false, in toto; that I never carried 500 copies of said circular or any other number to Bayne City for distribution, that I never placed any copies in Dr. E. P. Allen's hands, or the hands of any other person at Bayne City, that I was to Bayne City with Mr. Cook shortly before the election, but that neither of us to my knowledge had any such circular, neither did I say any in the conveyance.

Douglas C. Lovejoy, being duly sworn, deposes and says that the statement made in the Sentinel, of March 31st, inst., in regard to the circulating of the circular "Charlevoix Courier" is a large falsehood, and that he never circulated any of them, or assisted in any manner what-ever in their circulation, and further deposed not.

JAMES H. TOWER,
Justice of the Peace.

"Follow in one thing, false in all." It is safe to conclude that from first all the statements connecting East Jordan with this circular are false.

Another Circular.

While the friends of Bayne City are trying to prove East Jordan's connection with "that circular," they seem to forget another circular, addressed "to the citizens of the northern townships of Charlevoix county," in which appeared the statement that "we have go and reason to believe, and do believe that Charlevoix has taken up a strong and determined hostility against this increasing the number of her supervisors, should the question fail to carry in favor of East Jordan." This circular bears evidence of having been printed in the Statesman office, and is signed by 34 of the business men of Bayne City, including W. A. Norton, P. A. Barlour, A. W. Nicholson, F. J. Hill, J. C. McFallin, Z. N. Gurbut, H. A. Jersey, F. M. Abraham, B. F. Ingalls, W. J. Lewis, E. F. Allen, H. C. Miley, R. L. Corbett, and others. We have a copy of this circular in our possession.

"Population Centers.

A writer in the Statesman—the same who has been perambulating certain portions of the county preaching his peculiar doctrines—in order to show that the eastern portion of the county is rapidly outstripping the western in population, assumes that the only correct way to judge of the future growth of Charlevoix county, is by the percentage of increase in each town. Let us see. He claims that the township of Melrose increased from 1880 to 1884 in the ratio of 283 per cent, while Charlevoix during the same period increased in the ratio of 148 per cent. We shall not attempt to dispute the correctness of his figures, for having "wielded the birch" in a country school, it is not presumable that he can possibly be mistaken. The fallacious one, however, of taking the per cent of increase as a basis for future population, instead of the actual per cent increase, will appear by the following comparison: In 1880 the population of Melrose township was 479; in 1884, 303. In 1880, the population of Charlevoix township was 619; in 1884, 1,520. Melrose increased in population 224; Charlevoix 731; a balance in favor of Charlevoix of 507. Melrose, even with its phenomenal increase of ratio during the last four years, which it cannot hope to again attain, will fare badly in the race for population in the future with Charlevoix, whose increase alone during the four years, is almost double the entire population of Melrose.

Early in the campaign Bayne City based her entire claims for the county seat on the proposition that she lacked but a few miles of being the exact geographical center of the county, but it is a fact that should be taken into consideration by those geographically inclined that more than three-fourths of the county seats in this State are not located at the geographical centers, but have been located on the basis of population centers existing at the time, and prospective. The brilliant idea has recently occurred to them that it might be policy to try to convince the people to the voters of the county, that while they were many miles eastward of the present center of population, they might by some peculiar process of reasoning, and a bonus porus of figures, demonstrate that the population center was rapidly moving eastward, and that at some time in the near future, Bayne City would be located at the population center of the county. These pettifogging tactics will fail to catch any great number of voters. Our population is, in our wisdom, no matter how prophetic the far-seeing, cannot reasonably realize that the time will ever come when the eastern portion of the county, with its inland population, can successfully compete in population with the commercial advantages of the western, with its already superior start, and future grand possibilities. It may, as the writer claims, "move steadily eastward" for a short time, but is it not reasonable to suppose that but a few years will now elapse before the population center can be depended, with almost absolute certainty?—Enterprise.

To Prevent Pneumonia.

Says a Boston physician to the Congregationalist—As pneumonia is essentially a contagious disease, the best preventive measures are those which avoid the causes of contagion. Pneumony congestion is favored by too heavy clothing worn in Winter weather. A serious error is the supposition that a double set of flannels worn next to the skin affords double protection. The fact is that in such a case the inner flannel absorbs all secretions and perspiration, which are there retained by the outer flannel. An almost positive-tive action is thus brought about, which, among the skin and rendering it highly susceptible to the slightest exposure. Over-heated, ill-ventilated rooms, and the sudden transition from these to the sharp outer air, are other avoidable predisposing causes of the disease. Do who men a cold sponge-bath with brisk rubbing every morning, who wears the lightest clothing consistent with comfortable protection, and keeps his living rooms well ventilated and at a mean temperature of 68 degrees, is employing the best preventive treatment of pneumonia known to sanitary science.

Michigan's Share.

The river and harbor bill is completed, and the amounts appropriated for Michigan, which are given below, show that Mr. Carleton has done yeoman service for the waterways of his own state, and entitle him to a great deal of credit for his untiring energy in this direction. A quarter of a million dollars for the new Ste. Marie Falls canal is a good leader to the nearly a million dollars appropriated for Michigan. Here are the figures.

The oyster beds on the Hudson, which extend from New York to Sing Sing, and which have been productive ever since this country was settled, are likely to be soon annihilated.

Increasing population is so polluting the waters of our river that the sewer portions of the beds have already been destroyed, and those that remain are so infected oysters are removed to purer waters, where they can develop their natural size and flavor.

Patti's last wedding will probably occur in the spring. A London newspaper says that nothing now stands in the way of the tenor's union with the most celebrated soprano of the day except the time prescribed by law—six months after her divorce—which will expire in May next.

Who Redeemed Her.

In some portions of southern Germany, when a woman desires to marry she has to pass a sort of civil and reform examination by the priest, to see if she properly comprehends the nature of the sacred obligation she is anxious to assume. The priest of a certain village was sitting at his desk writing out his sermon, when there came a timid knock at the door.

"Come in," said the pastor, and an unstarched member of his flock, who had spent some dairy summers of single blessedness, entered. The pastor kept on writing. Presently he looked up, and asked what she wished.

"I—am—going—to—be—married," she said, chewing her apron modestly.

Once more the pastor began to write, but remembering the civil service he had undertaken, to test her knowledge of the plan of salvation, he asked her:

"Molly, who is it that has redeemed you from your lost and hopeless condition?"

"Hans Fickelbaumle, your reverence, and he is such a nice young man."—Texas Siftings.

An Indiana newspaper says that the statement as to Shed of Cedar County has passed the following notice: "No subscriptions to be discontinued. There is too much responsibility attached to their safe-keeping to permit indiscriminate taking. I have my household work to do, and have no time to stand guard when parties come to see pictures. And they do not care to be seen. Please do not intrude. Aurilla C. Quilton."

United States Senator Spooner may not be a statesman, but he is a very able lawyer and an excellent business man. A day or two ago, speaking of railroad demoralization, he said: "My belief, founded on wide experience, is that there is too much individuality in railroad management. Stockholders need protection from managers. It is wars, which are demoralizing to honest business as well as destructive of railroad properties, are brought about sometimes on the slightest provocation, or even on no imaginary pretext, involving the loss of millions of dollars and bringing about general depression and public distress.

THE JOURNAL.

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

Notes and News.

Speaking of Gov. Swineford's case, the St. Ignace Republican—a staunt organ of the party from which it takes its name—frankly says that "as acting governor of the territory of Alaska, he has furnished the world more common sense information regarding that far off corner of our domain than we should have known by a street application to school geography for a long century. Never was a democratic 'mis-sionary' more from friends, consistent in his faraway labors, and deserve his confirmation by the senate." The St. Ignace paper voices the sentiment of ninety-nine out of every hundred republicans in the upper peninsula, where Gov. Swineford is best known. They know him to be an uncompromising democrat, but a man of broad views, generous impulses, remarkable energy and great executive ability, whose qualities of head and heart admirably fit him for his present trust. The president made no mistake when he named Mr. Swineford governor of Alaska, but the senate will commit a grievous one if it refuses to confirm his appointment.—Mining Journal.

General Manager Malliken, of the Chicago and West Michigan railroad, is in Boston in conference with the owners of the road. It is understood authoritatively that the purpose of Mr. Malliken's visit is to arrange for securing funds for the extension of the road from Baldwin, its present terminus, to Traverse City. It is said that as all probability the necessary funds will be forthcoming and that the work of building the extension will commence this summer.—Grand Rapids Eagle.

Gov. A. P. Swineford has written his friends that he will be home from Alaska the first week in April and will at once proceed to Washington, where he will answer the charges formally served at his confirmation by the Senate. He says he can satisfactorily explain all the charges brought against him, and he is confident he will be honored by the State Board of Commissioners to the New Orleans exposition.—Herald.

Wonderful Wheat from Puget Sound.

Mr. Oliver Coustner, who resides on the southwest quarter of sec. 32, Township 21 north, Range 4 east, about five miles from the city, brought in some samples of his famed wheat, raised this year on his creek-bottom clay loam land. The stalks are the products of two kernels and are six feet high from the root to the top head. The heads are very peculiar, resembling a pine cone, being thick and clumpy. One of the heads of average size was shelled out, and the grains counted from the one head were 131. According to this one kernel of wheat produced 266 grains, four wheat grains, or nearly 1,000 fold. The yield per acre to Mr. Coustner of this wheat was eighty-five bushels. On the same kind of soil he has raised red-top clover this year six feet in height. Those who are acquainted with good milling wheat say that this will make a No. 1 quality of flour. One of the heads, which was weighed, tipped the scales at over half an ounce.—Tacoma Evening News.

WASHINGTON'S FAMILY.

Talk About a Queer Old Print That Used To Be Popular.

"Yes, that is a very interesting print and quite old," said John Sartain when questioned in regard to an engraving entitled "Washington's Family Circle," which may be yet seen in some old houses or in out-of-the-way barber-shops or old print stores. "I can not recall the name of the painter of the original picture," continued Mr. Sartain, trying to jog his memory. "I have such a poor family for names. I am afraid I shall forget my own. It was painted in 1793 and engraved by David Edwin, a very noted workman—a nipple engraver. At that time he was doing journeyman work for the artist who painted it. Edwin told me an odd story about the original painting. While it was in the study of the painter the yellow fever broke out in this city and the artist and Edwin removed to Burlington, N. J., and the picture, which was quite large, was taken up by them on the river in a row-boat. The day was very breezy, and Edward related the very ludicrous difficulty they had to keep from capsizing, the painting catching as much wind. They made their journey with much difficulty and only by rowing in the eye of the wind."

The engraving is the first of the series of "Family Circles" of presidents, and represents Washington, Martha Washington, young George W. Parke Custis, Eleanor Parke Custis, and William Lee, the colored body servant who has so miraculously survived so long and in so many different places. The scene is an interior looking out to a wooded and the distant Potomac. Young George Custis stands on the left; beside him is a globe. Washington is seated. One of the general's hands is on the boy's shoulder, the other on a table, on which is stretched a map of the future city of Washington. Mrs. Washington sits at the right side of the table, and she is pointing to the map with her fan. Behind the table is Eleanor Custis, and to her left and in rear of Mrs. Washington the colored servant, Lee. Washington is dressed in regimentals with top-boots and spurs on, and is looking benignly toward Martha, who has a sharp, business sort of expression on her face, and at a distance the unfurled map appears not unlike a deed, and Mrs. Washington's action with the fan and tout ensemble would seem to say: "George, I won't pass in the sale of this property." On one corner of the table is the general's hat, doubled up and resembling very much a large rat. It and the servant's face are the two conspicuously dark, black objects in the engraving. The young children of the group, as every historical student knows, were Mrs. Washington's by her first husband.

"Edwin was a noted engraver," said Mr. Sartain. "I wrote a life of him. He did some very good work. That which first brought him into prominence was an engraving of Dr. William Smith, the first provost of the university, or rather academy then, from which the university sprang. Dr. Smith was a noted ethnologist and invited out from England by Dr. Benjamin Franklin and others to take charge of the old academy. Shortly after his introduction came a portrait of him was painted by Stuart, this was engraved by David Edwin, and so favorably impressed Stuart that he thereafter gave him all his work.

"In regard to the Washington family circle engraving, there are two of them, the latter one was engraved by my son from a picture by Prof. Schussele, in order to give a commission to Edwin. In this painting and engraving, the family group is reversed, but contains the same persons and similarly dressed. Mrs. Washington has the same sewing while on the, the general the ruffled shirt and dress, but minus the spurs. The body servant is depicted entering the door in the rear, and the scene does not look out on the river. Prof. Schussele's painting was an admirable composition, perhaps a little too small. The engraving from this was very popular, and great numbers were sold. This class of subjects, Lincoln's family and Grant's, are very popular. It is not often, however, the original one of the Washington group—either my son's or Edwin's—are met with.

"Napoleon crossing the Alps was a noted engraving done by Edwin. The original of this was painted by David, and was in the collection of Joseph Bonaparte at Bordentown. While there one night it fell from above the mantel where it hung, and was pierced by the arms of several candelabra, which stood on the mantel, and was badly injured. Afterward it was restored. Napoleon in this picture is very sleeker, as in Houdon's statue. Were he was a young man and his counsel he was slight and had a hungry, vulpine, but wonderfully powerful expression."—Philadelphia Times.

The oak tree planted by Lord Byron at Newstead abbey is large and flourishing, although the abbey owners have cut the names "Byron and Augusta" long since dead. The portion of the tree on which the names were carved is preserved among the treasured memories of the poet in the abbey. The tree planted by Dr. Livingstone is on the lawn, as well as the one planted by Stanley. The present owner of Newstead was the one who found and bosom companion of Livingstone during his years of wonderful work in Africa. This Col. Webb, who bought the abbey of Col. Wildman, the wealthy West India planter, who bought it of Lord Byron, is the man who saved Livingstone's life by shooting the lion which, after fearfully mutilating him, still stood over his prostrate body.

Guizot's France

CELEBRATED HISTORY OF FRANCE from the Earliest Times to 1848. By M. Guizot, Prime Minister of France, continued from his notes, by his daughter, Mme. Guizot De Witt. Complete in 8 vols., large 12mo., bound elegantly in fine cloth, gilt tops. A new edition just issued, reduced in price to $6.00, including postage. This is much the best edition published of this magnificent work, which is known as the best popular history of France. The cost of the imported edition, with substantially the same illustrations is $36.00, while this is certainly the best in form, and the most desirable for the library. "THE MATCHLESS BRILLIANCY of Guizot's style, his graphic descriptions of men and events, his painstaking minuteness of detail, the lucidity and ease of his style and the admirable philosophic reflections, all combine to render it worthy of the description it bears as the most popular history of France. It is as fascinating as a novel, and as life-like as a theatrical representation of the events and personages it describes. How the set can be sold for that price remains, after much reflection, a mystery, for the work is not sham work, it is well done; altogether it is a marvel of cheapness.

The Pennsylvania Accolite.

The people of Southwestern Pennsylvania were startled on the 26th of September, by the occurrence of a very unusual phenomenon; an immense meteor had descended upon them. At first the impression prevailed that the district had been visited by an earthquake, or that a terrible explosion of natural gas had taken place, while others decided that a pretty large set of boilers had burst, or that a gigantic blast had thrown down a large mass of rock from some neighboring quarry. Loud detonations were heard throughout that entire section, the explosions apparently following a straight line across the country, and causing not a little consternation among the people.

The meteor seems to have passed from the northeast to the southwest, and the noise of its passage, which was variously described as resembling the rattling of heavy artillery over a solid road-bed or as a mighty peal of thunder, was heard over a large area of country in the neighborhood of Pittsburg and to the south. A number of witnesses describe it as an immense mass of fire, fully as large as the largest barns—and Pennsylvania barns it will be remembered are noted for their size. A powerful flame of deep red color, which tapered off into a darker tail, seemed attached to the mass. This, however, is stated to have disappeared as the meteor came nearer, and the color of the mass changed to a pale white, which was maintained so long as it remained in sight.

A mail-carrier on horseback and a man who was plowing at the time both describe their animals as being so terrified that they remained perfectly motionless, and could not be persuaded to stir for several minutes after the fiery visitor had disappeared. It finally struck the earth on the farm of Mr. Buckland, in Jefferson township, Washington County, near the West Virginia line. The stone broke into two pieces, and became partly buried. The color is gray, with streaks of red running over it; possibly from the formation of sesquioxide of iron. The form is irregular, but approximated to a cone, as reported, see without precedent. It is stated to be from thirty to fifty feet in diameter, but we doubt very much that this statement can be verified. The Globe Institute, in the Yale College cabinet at New Haven is noted for its size, but it weighs only 1,635 pounds, and has a length of 3 feet 4 inches, a breadth of 2 feet 3 inches, and a height of 1 foot 4 inches. It came from the Red River.

A still more noted one is the Tucson meteorite, from Sonora, Mexico, which is now in the Smithsonian institution. It is ring-shaped, and forty-seven inches in its greatest diameter. The most remarkable images of which we have any knowledge have been found in South America. One discovered in the district of Chaco-Gualamba was estimated to weigh sixteen tons. These weights and volumes would, however, be quite dwarfed by a comparison for those reported for the Pennsylvania meteorite. But there is probably still a little romance attached to these accounts, and the true dimensions will not be reached until later.

An odd superstition clings to meteors, and many who witnessed this remarkable one were inspired with the dread belief that it brought with it a spirit of pestilence and famine, but if those people would only call to remembrance the wide prevalence of meteoric visitors they would conclude that the most persistent spirit which their imagination would annach to them must be quite exhausted by this time. Dr. Kleiber, of St. Petersburg, has calculated that 4,350 pounds of meteoric dust fall to the earth every hour, which would amount to fifty-two tons a day or more than 21,500 tons in a year, while Professor Proctor thinks even this estimate is too small. Yet very little damage is done by the fall of these "pair stones," for the most part of them fall upon uncultivated ground or into the sea. Relic hunters are reported to be already at work and carrying off the meteorite by piecemeal. This seems to indicate that the mass was very much shattered by its fall or that it has a large predominance of stony matter which would enable fragments to be broken off, for the most accomplished vandal would find difficulty in securing a souvenir from a piece of meteoric iron.—Scientific American.

The Chicago Daily News

Has the Largest Daily Circulation in America.

Its issue for the year 1884 averaged 125,178 copies daily, and it is now regularly printing over 135,000 papers a day.

The magnitude of this unequaled circulation is best appreciated when it is said that it exceeds the circulations of all other Chicago dailies combined. Taking from the three standard newspaper directories—Ayer & Son's Annual, Rowell's Directory and Hubbard's Directory—the questions which most nearly represent the actual circulations of the Chicago papers, the following diagram correctly illustrates their relative positions as to extent of circulation.

From these figures it appears that the circulation of THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS exceeds the combined circulations of all the other Chicago dailies by 19,873 copies daily. The reason for this phenomenal success are obvious.

THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS

is a complete newspaper in all that constitutes the best type of American journalism.

It is a member of the Associated Press, and is the only 3 cent paper in the West that possesses this first essential to a complete news service. In addition, it has its own private wire (by lease) from the Western Union Telegraph Co.) connecting its Chicago office with New York and Washington, at both of which points it has its own news bureaus. THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS prints a 24 hr. news.

It is an independent paper. It recognizes the utility of political parties as means for the accomplishment of proper ends, but it declines to regard any mere party as a fit subject for unquestioning allegiance. It solicits the patronage of intelligent, thoughtful, honest people, who love country more than party.

THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS

is a "short and to the point" paper. It believes that newspaper reading is but an incident of the day, not its chief business. It accordingly leaves to the "blanket sheets" the monopoly of tiresome and wearisome amplification. It seeks to say all that the reader should care to read, and to say it in the shortest possible manner. It is a daily paper for busy people.

It is a cheap paper, fit for the family circle. It is a cheap paper—2 cents per day, 12 cents per week, 50 cents per month, $6.00 per year. Sold by all news dealers throughout the Northwest. Mailed to any address, post paid, upon receipt of price.

Where the facilities of a daily mail are not enjoyed THE CHICAGO WEEKLY NEWS is recommended as "the next best." It is a large 8 page, 64 column paper, carefully made up to meet all the varying needs of this family circle. It is the largest "dollar weekly" in America. It is equal to the best.

Local Notes and News.

CLEMENT J. STRANG, Editor.

The Enterprise has just got in a lot of new body type.

Monroe Dickinson is the new postmaster at Boyne Falls.

The tug Anapach was frisking about on Round lake on Monday.

We would call the attention of our readers to the change in Bartholomew & Co's. ad. in this issue.

The JOURNAL job room is turning out some neat work these days, in cards, envelopes, letter-heads, bills and programmes. Call and look over our specimens.

The name George prevailed at Hayes' camp this winter. Beginning with the foreman, we have Geo. Hoag, Geo. Wilson, Geo. Abrier, Geo. Vosburg, Geo. Miller, Geo. Wakefield and Geo. Lynn.

The fact that the Boyne City folks have picked out the site for county buildings, is proof that they expect the county to build them at once. If they expected to build a town hall, and let the county occupy it, that is what they would talk about.

"The Boys' Band of Charlevoix which accompanied the [minstrel] troupe, rendered some fine music, in the afternoon and evening preceding the entertainment on our street. Charlevoix may well be proud of this band, as it is the best one that place ever had."—Enterprise.

Steele's big store in Advance, took fire on Saturday while the citizens were nearly all at a caucus meeting. Parties from Boyne saw the fire and went to assist in removing goods. The postoffice and telephone office were both located here. The greater part of the mail was saved, but the building is a total loss.

Burns & Scroggie, our enterprising liverymen, are soon to have five new horses in their stables, and as many new carriages and buggies, with harness to make the outfit complete. They have also purchased and refitted a fine hack, and now feel better prepared than ever before, to accommodate all in need of livery service.

The village schools re-open next Monday, for the spring term. A complete adjustment of classes for the coming year, is now being made, and it is urgently requested by all the teachers, that patrons place their children in school at the opening of the term. Pupils coming later cannot be properly classified, and the consequence must be a loss of position by the pupil or a delay of the majority of the class.

On information furnished by C. Y. Cook and Dr. Preston, Messrs. L. D. Bartholomew & Co. have made application to the State Fish Commissioner to have McGeagh's creek, Stover creek, and Newman creek stocked with brook trout. We all have an interest in hoping for the final success of the enterprise. It will undoubtedly be done if owners of land through which the streams pass do not raise an objection to the streams being fished as public waters.

The April issue of The Library Magazine, containing its usual variety of current literature of the highest order, announces that with its next issue, radical changes will take place. It will thereafter be published weekly instead of monthly. Without increase in price it will give an increased amount of valuable literature, and great gain in freshness and timeliness will be possible. A specimen copy of the Magazine in its new form will be sent free to any applicant. John B. Alden, Publisher, 393 Pearl St., New York City. G. W. CROUTER, Agent, Charlevoix.

The Moosback's Questions Answered.

In our issue of March 11th, we published a communication from a prominent citizen of Marion who signs himself "Moosback," in which several questions were asked concerning matters of vital importance at this time. A rush of business prevented our immediate reply to these questions. We now undertake to do justice to our friend's attempt to get at truth and fact. We take the questions in the order in which they were asked.

1.—"Is there any truth in the railroad yarns?" This question was pretty effectually answered in our issue of March 18, but during the fortnight, new proofs that our first impressions of the matter were correct, have come to hand.

A Grand Rapids Democrat reporter interviewed Mr. Hoghart a few days since, and published a statement to the effect that there has been for some time, a great deal of talk concerning a branch to Charlevoix, and especially to the furnace at Ironton. In this interview, Mr. Hoghart says distinctly: "I have no doubt that the road will be built, but do not know how soon. The question is, whether we will run a direct line across the Arm or go around by East Jordan." And the article closes with the statement: "But there is no telling when the road will be built."

The statement, "go around by East Jordan," contemplates going to Boyne City first; but when it is found that Ironton can be reached via East Jordan direct from a little below Boyne Falls, by building 2½ or 3 miles more road, and building no bridge, the chances are that the iron horse will go screaming through East Jordan when the silence of Boyne City will be broken only by the hoots of the midnight owl.

2.—"And, if so [that is if there is truth in the railroad yarn] might there not be some better point on the route for the county seat, if we vote to leave it where it is at present?"

We think so. If the most sanguine hopes of the most enthusiastic Boyne-ite should be realized, Ironton would still be the center of population and business, and the most accessible point to all parties on county business. By voting to leave the county seat where it is, we let the question rest until what is best for all can be determined.

3.—"Can the supervisors build a bridge across the Arm without a vote of the people?"

The supervisors can appropriate $1000 each year, for such purposes. [Howl. St. 483, sub. 7.] At this rate it would take from 50 to 75 years to complete the bridge. But what a burden to the people would this tax become! Besides a vote of the people, it is necessary to have a permit from the U. S. Gov., since the Arm is navigable water, and under control of the secretary of war. In connection with this, we would state that the supervisors could tax the people to the tune of $1000 a year for public buildings. They could set a gang of men at work, pay them cash until the $1,000 is exhausted, and give them orders on the county for the balance. Then they could add these orders, and make them an indebtedness against the county, and in that way compel the people to pay the amount of this indebtedness the 21 year. The bulk of the taxes come from this end of the county, so there would be little hesitation on the part of the supervisors in proceeding in this high handed manner, since all the benefit would accrue to the eastern portion of the township.

4.—"Are those parties who guaranteed county buildings, free of cost to the county, all responsible parties?"

This question was pretty effectually answered in our last issue; but for the benefit of our numerous new subscribers we recapitulate what we then stated:

If they really intended to furnish free county buildings, they would have begun last summer to erect a town hall. They will probably say, The county seat is where you have put it, now furnish your own buildings. It would be to their interest not to keep their promise, for by so doing they would make the county invest money there, and so insure the permanent location of the county seat there. The expense would not deter them, for, as we said before, they pay but a small per cent of the taxes and reap all the benefits. The board of supervisors last year, equalized the six western townships at $1,380,150, and the eight eastern townships at $889,092. Wilson we leave out of account, as being equally benefited either way.

5.—"And would not such a guarantee, supposing the parties were good, be outlawed in less than ten years?"

It is good for nothing; both because it is not in writing and because there is no indemnity, or tangible value received on their part.

In the case of Charlevoix and East Jordan, it was to their interest to keep their pledge, because they well knew that when they failed to do so, they would certainly lose the county seat. But with Boyne City, by breaking their promise, they will certainly hold the county seat.

The County Seat Question.

Charlevoix, March 23, 1886.

EDITOR JOURNAL.—The county-seat question seems to be the all-absorbing theme, and many schemes have been resorted to, hoping, no doubt, to hood-wink the people to vote for the removal of the county seat from East Jordan to Boyne City, but alas for Boyne, their many projects won't work, for I do not believe that the good sense of the people of Charlevoix will vote to remove the county seat to Boyne City. Why? 1st. Boyne wanted it at East Jordan; now let them be satisfied for at least five years with the good they think they have accomplished; 2d. Should Boyne get the county seat, they having a majority of supervisors in that hashed up part of the county, the question would not be submitted to the people again; 3d. If Boyne gets the county seat, they, having a majority of supervisors, could make it very warm for the tax-payers by levying taxes year after year to the tune of a $20,000 court house, and it can be surely be done, if, by any hocus pocus, they can secure the county seat. What can they so long as the wealth lies in Charlevoix and the western end of the county? Who would want to locate here with a bonded debt of $20,000 hanging over our heads? No one, it seems very nice and looks very well in print, regarding the free building for ten years, but when looking into are unscrupulous enough to boost that they would move the county seat into a swamp, and would make all the expense they could, to get the county seat at Boyne, and, when there, harrass the people with levying taxes for county buildings, that the people of Charlevoix would be glad to give up in a financial death struggle. It is time the people of Charlevoix and the western part of the county begin to think, and think seriously about how they vote Monday, April 5th, 1886.

Growth of a Big Book.

When Webster's Unabridged was first published in one volume, it was a comparatively small book. Some years after, an addition was made of 1500 pictorial illustrations, a table of synonyms, and an appendix of new words that had come into use. A few years later came an entirely new revised edition of larger size, with 3000 pictorial illustrations, then, after an interval of a few years, a biographical dictionary of nearly 10,000 names, and a supplement of nearly 4000 new words were added, and now there has come a new and most valuable addition, a gazetteer of the world, of over 25,000 Titles. The work is now not only the dictionary, par excellence, but a biographical dictionary, a gazetteer of the world, and a great many other good things in its many valuable tables.

Gradually the chains are tightening around the drink and tobacco evils. A bill has just been introduced into the Iowa legislature which provides that no person who uses alcoholic stimulants, tobacco or opium shall be qualified to teach in the public schools or colleges of the state, or be eligible to the office of county superintendent or member of state board of examiners. This is a move in the right direction. In many of the states the evils of alcohol, tobacco and opium are required to be taught in the schools by the laws of the state. If these laws are taught by precept only, not much will be accomplished. It is right and proper, therefore that the state should require both precept and example from those whom it employs to teach the children.

Miss Cleveland's temperance views have come to the front at her 2 o'clock luncheons to ladies, at which there are Apollinaris and Potomac water instead of wines; and lemonade instead of punch. This meets with very general approval, not only among those she invites, but women outside the entertainments expressed approbation. The president may do as he wishes at his dinner parties, serving six or seven wines if he chooses. Those luncheons are handsome entertainment and social occasions much enjoyed by the guests.

Don't be scared when they call you a "fanatic" Remember that a few years ago they were denouncing Lincoln, Greely, Chase, Seward, Garrison and Lovejoy as "fanatics." To-day these names and others that voted with them are the brightest among the cherished names of the nation. The fanatics of to-day are the heroes of to-morrow. It has ever been thus in the history of the race, and thus it will continue till the end of time.

Let there be an entire abstinence from intoxicating drinks throughout this country during the period of a single generation, and a mob would be as impossible as combination without oxygen.—Horace Mann.

A Unique Cyclopedia.

An extremely valuable Cyclopedia, and of very great popular interests Alden's Cyclopedia of Universal Literature, Volume II. of which is just published. Novel in plan, and novel in focus, it ones beautiful and convenient, and at a price low even compared with Mr. Alden's always low prices, this volume gives in its nearly 500 pages biographical sketches of one hundred and eleven prominent authors, with characteristic selections from their writings. The following authors, among others, appear in this volume: Audubon, St. Augustine, D'Auverguie, Bacon, Balzac, Bancroft, Bamin, Barbauld, Beecher (several of the name), Beethan, Bion, Bjornson, Black (William), Blackstone, Blessington (Countess of) and Boccaccio; thus representing nearly all ages and all nations even in this volume—American, English, French, German, Italian, Greek, Latin, Swedish, Portuguese, Scotch, Dutch, Irish, Norwegian, and Danish authors—from the period 280 B. C. to A. D. 1886. The literary and mechanical workmanship are both of a high order. The work is really one that ought to find a place in every home library; it offers a fund of entertainment and instruction that will prove well-nigh inexhaustible. The price, only 60 cents a volume, makes its possession possible even to nearly every school-boy. The work is published also in Parts of 150 pages each (exchangable at any time for bound volumes, which are sent post-paid for 15 cents each. Every reader of this notice ought to get at least a specimen part for examination. John B. Alden, Publisher, New York; G. W. Crouter agent Charlevoix.

Familiarity Breeds Beauty, Too.

After you come to know people very intimately, you do not know whether they are pretty or not. Their ways make an impression on you, but not their noses and ears, their eyes and mouths. In time the soul expresses itself to you, and it is then which you see. A man who has been married twenty years scarcely knows what his wife looks like. He may declare that he does, and tell you that she is a fascinating little blonde, with soft blue eyes, long after she is fat and red and 40, because the image of his early love is in his heart, and he doesn't see her as she is to day, but as she was when he courted her.

The average an indifferent husband he may not know she is the fine woman he admires people think he. You know how people think he. You know how people admire some women think them beauties, and you know instinctively that quite through away on men who value a wife for her looks even as a wife.

A LEGEND OF INNSPRUCK.

BY MARRY BALDWIN

Tempest and storm were raging with wild fury through the rocky mountain passes and deep gorges surrounding the little village of Innspruck, nestled in the beautiful valley of the Inzier, one chilly September evening in the year 1755, as Gottlieb Glück, the keeper of the only inn the place afforded, drew the blinds of the bar and seated himself before the glowing fire, with a smile of satisfaction and pleasure upon his ruddy face. If it was his theory and practice without, in the core room of the tavern, with the large fireplace emitting cheerfulness and warmth, and the pretty, shining bottles of his bar furnished and bright, all was inviting and of a nature calculated to inspire feelings of comfort and contentment. Besides, the season had been a fortunate one for honest old Gottlieb, and his coffers swelled with hard-earned guilders, the result of care and attention to his summer visitors. It was not strange, therefore, that as he took the large armchair before the fire, he cast a satisfied glance at his evening customers, who sat smoking and drinking at a table near by.

Suddenly there was a lull in the storm—a lull following a long, wild shriek of the sweeping wind, with which seemed mingled a scream so insanely and yet so human that the men at the table dropped their pipes and looked askance at their host, who half rose to his feet at the ghostly whisper of his "help!" young Arnold Tegtmeyer.

"What was that?"

Whether the dying echo of the wind was human or not, they never knew; but their consternation at something uncanny was satisfied a moment later, when there came a loud knock at the outer door, followed by a rude push against the panel of barrier, and as if flow upon their entered a man whose strange and sudden appearance brought every person in the room to his feet.

He was a tall, thin man, with cadaverous face and wildly gleaming eyes, supported in a long black cloak, which, sweeping back from his form, revealed a gaudy velvet and brocade, and a richly jewelled sword. In his arms he bore a bundle, wrapped in folds of dark crimson cloth, like silken counterpane, and as he confronted the gaping throng his wet and dripping garments, and pale, wild-eyed features caused them to drop back with mingled consternation and surprise.

"Well?" he said, finally, a fierce sneer on his lip, a sharp rebuke in his tone of voice, "have ye never seen a benighted traveller before, that ye stare at him as though he were the evil demon himself? Who is the landlord here?"

Gottlieb, somewhat reassured at the honest German sight of his strange guest, advanced a step and intimated his proprietorship of the inn.

"Then prepare your best room at once, if this be an inn! I tell you, demon! no to the nearest tavern. My horse is without, shelter and food him at once, and lead the way to my apartment."

With a trembling hand and Boeotian accent the host took a lighted candle from the mantel, and led the way to the open staircase leading to the upper story. The stranger followed him closely, and as they reached the front apartment of the upper floor laid his burden carefully on the bed, and confronted the innkeeper.

"Listen to me," he said impressively, as he took a purse from his pocket; "this purse contains a hundred gulders—unless this room and do not return until I call for you. If any come for me, if any inquiries are made concerning me——"

"But, your worship," began Gottlieb—"a fire, a warm meal or a change of clothes——"

"Nothing, I tell you," hissed the strange "Do you are paid. See that I am not disturbed."

As he spoke he grasped the candle and thrust the unhappy innkeeper unceremoniously into the outer passage, with the purse in his hand.

"But," persisted Gottlieb, "you spoke of visitors; who are you? What shall I tell——"

"The devil, if you like," interrupted the stranger sharply, and closed the door in his host's face.

I believe it," muttered Gottlieb as he groped his way down the dark stairs. "Hush, and I what was that?"

Less terrifying and far more human than the voice without which had so startled him but a few moments before, there sounded on his ears the low, plaintive wail of an infant. There could be no mistaking the sound, and as the innkeeper entered the public room, curiosity and interest were depicted on every face at the announcement and consternation expressed in his own.

"Business is business," he said as he resumed his seat, and in lit the noted pipe in his hand, with the gold pieces shining between his fingers, and his face the view of his friends, "and his lordship pays royally, yet it is a question with me if his worship's ear needs do not refer more accurately to himself than he might wish it to be considered."

"What was it he said?" queried one of the men at the table.

"That he was the devil."

A silence brooded over the little throng for a few moments following the words, and the barkeeper, Arnold Tegtmeyer, after fortifying himself with a large drink of spirits at the bar, walked restlessly to the window and gazed gloomily forth into the darkness and rain.

He might have stood there five minutes or more, when the little company, which had meanwhile drifted into various speculations and comments on the strange visitor, was suddenly startled by a cry of amazement and terror from the lad. Intuitively, each man sprang to his feet, and hastened to the spot. Every eye followed the direction indicated by the white-faced lad, and a cold horror overspread each face as they looked and saw——

A sight which curdled their blood with a nameless terror. Running from the house was a large timber, which connected twenty feet away with the stables of the inn below, and perhaps from which was the gate of the place. About eight feet above this was a second timber running in the same direction and strengthening the frame-work of the entire structure. There was a peculiar blur or cloud connected with this second beam, for from it hung even than long five made-form, and the iron rings through which the fatal ropes had been passed were still there; and as each man looked he saw dangling in the lower beam, and supporting himself by the upper one, the awful savage. Whatever his mission, whatever his intent, in the light which shone from the windows of the upper room his Mephistophelian face and ghostly appearance caused his to resemble some demon. Light as a sprite, quick as an arrow, he swung from the place and disappeared from their view within the window of his apartment.

The minutes of the hours were intensely horrified. To their superstitious minds the man was nothing more nor less than what he had himself claimed to be—the devil. Pallor and fear marked every face, chased away and one hooded over the room. As a loud knocking came to the door and an imperious voice demanded admittance, there was not a face that did not pale in expectancy of some new and startling development in the affair of the man locked in the upper apartment.

"Gottlieb Glück!" sonorous and shrill sounded a voice through the stilled room.

Trembling in every limb, as though a summons from the dead-house had been had sounded on his startled hearing, the landlord rose forward.

"I am here," he quivered, and then, as he recognized in the speaker the Captain of the guard of the Castle Rudenstein, the physician, relaxed in the action, his frame resumed its wonted hue of health, and he waved the visitors and the four soldiers following him into the bar.

The Captain strode into the apartment and claimed thereby silent him, his manner evident his bearing military, his face ominous with an air of importance, though some matter of weighty importance rested upon his mind.

"Gottlieb Glück," he said, in that tone which the gaping people in the room knew the suspected criminal, "this visit is an official one."

"An official visit to my house," stammered the landlord, awed by the Captain's commanding presence.

"Yes. The King places the ban of martial law on this place until the house is searched."

"Searched?"

"Gottlieb could only rapidly repeat the solitary words.

"Aye, you are suspected——"

Stupefying, theft—a hidden crime about to be revealed.

The gaping were burning with curiosity, their eager hearts hung on the Captain's next words.

"Suspected of harboring a criminal," was the conclusion of the officer's words.

A smile of excitement and relief broke over the landlord's broad face.

"Ah!" he cried, "I thought it. Our satanic visitor, we might have known."

"A tall, gaunt-looking man, with cloak and sword!" asked the Captain, in his eagerness springing to the side of Gottlieb and catching his arm.

"Yes, and long like the tenpter of Faust," assented the latter.

"Where is he?" demanded the Captain, excitedly.

Gottlieb pointed up the stairway.

"In that room!" cried the Captain to the soldiers, eager to share in the glory, and speeding up the stairway with disciplined tread.

With anxiously beating hearts the little coterie below held their breath, but no sound of clashing arms, or a struggle, or of an alarm sounded on their ears. Instead, they trembled with excitement, as a moment later the Captain came rushing down the stairs, his face pale and disappointed.

"The fiend!" he cried, "the murderer has escaped!"

"The murderer?" cried Gottlieb, aghast.

"Aye, the assassin of our noble master, the Count Ulrich Rudenstein, at the castle."

A somber hush brooded over the little group, the news too startling for immediate comment. Surprise alone held them speechless, for no other sentiment, save their hearts serve a secret satisfaction that the cruel and rapacious Count, the terror of his maiden peasantry, the oppressor of the poor, who, rumor said, had murdered his own wife, the beautiful Lady Agatha, to wed another, had met a deserved fate.

A cry from the lad—by, Tegtmeyer, diverted attention to the window where he stood.

"See," he cried, "der teufel."

The soldiers sprang to his side as he spoke.

There, crossing the beam toward the stable, the same burden in his arms he had borne when he entered the inn, was the strange visitor. He swayed to and fro as his dizzy perch, as though each three gust of wind would sweep him in the by space below.

"It is he," cried the Captain. "He must not escape. Fire!"

With simultaneous promptness the guns of the four soldiers covered the swaying figure. A deafening crash followed. When the smoke had cleared away the window frame was seen a ragged mass of splintered glass and wood.

They hastened to the yard, but sought in vain for the corpse of the assassin. Only a trail of blood to the stables; the steed gone, the tracks leading to the mountain gorges evidenced that the stranger, though fearfully wounded, had disappeared.

"He was no man—he was the devil," muttered the awe-stricken landlord.

The Captain turned upon him fiercely.

"Fool!" he cried. "He was no demon, except a human one. He entered the castle, stole the jewels ready for the Count's approaching marriage, murdered our master, and then taking the young son and heir of the Count from the cradle, escaped."

"It is retribution for the Count's murder of his wife," boldly spoke up one of the burghers.

"Silence!" comes, cried the Captain. "It is treason to speak thus. It was no demon's deed to set and murder without warning, but he cannot escape, for he is known."

"He is known?"

"Aye, as the brother of the dead Lady Agatha, who a month since sent a message to the Count from Tunis, warning him that he would avenge his sister's death."

"But how do you know it is he?" asked Gottlieb, skeptically.

"Because," replied the soldier, impressively, "attached to the hilt of the dagger found buried in the Count's breast was this."

A gasp, a prolonged gasp, was all could and sword!" asked the Captain, in his eagerness springing to the side of Gottlieb and catching his arm.

"Yes, and long like the tempter of Faust," assented the latter.

Around the County.

Facts and Figures.

EDITOR JOURNAL.—On Monday next will be decided the question which has for a long time occupied the public mind; whether the county seat remains for a time at East Jordan, or is permanently fixed at Boyne City. I wish to offer in as brief a manner as possible a few reasons that will lead one as well as others to vote against the removal at this time, and will try and confine myself mostly to facts and figures for the faith in me.

The population of Charlevoix in 1874, as shown by census was 2,360, of that 504 were in what is now known as the nine eastern towns, and 1,856 in the six western towns. In 1880 the population of the county was 5,115, and of that the nine eastern towns had 2128, and the six western 2987, an increase for the eastern towns of 1,625, while the west only increased only 1,131; showing that between 1874 and 1880, the center of population had moved to the east. And about that time the agitation of the removal of the county seat to Boyne City commenced, and at that time it looked as if Boyne City might not only be near the geographical center, but had the center of population also. In 1884, the population of the county was 9,462, and of this the eastern towns had 4,842, and the western towns 3620, an increase for the six western towns of 2,634, while the nine eastern towns only increased 1,716, showing plainly that the eastern towns lost between 1880 and 1884 all they had gained between 1874 and 1880. The increase in the eastern part of the county, between 1874 and 1880 was due largely to the building of the railroad, and to the settlement of unoccupied territory. And how is it now in 1886? We have no means of knowing the exact ratio of increase for the past two years, but every vote taken since 1884 shows plainly that the western towns have continued to increase much faster than the eastern ones. And I feel perfectly safe in making the statement that the township of South Arm alone has increased as much in population as the nine eastern towns combined; for it is a well known fact that the population of at least three of those towns is less than in 1884, or even in 1880. And this comparison has all been favorable to the eastern side from the fact that all the township of Bear Lake, Evangeline and Wilson have been included in the eastern portion, when as a matter of fact, about one-third of each of these townships lies west of the center line drawn north and south through the county.

And what has been said in regard to increase of population is true in regard to the increased valuation of the two sections. I have not the figures to refer to, but think I will be not far wrong in making the statement that the six towns west of the center line has double the assessed valuation of the nine towns to the east of it, which comprises two-thirds of the area of the county. Now what sense is there in fixing a county seat at a point from which both the center of population and the commercial center has been rapidly receding for the past six years and with every prospect that it will continue to do so for these years to come?

Now if there is any person or persons in the county, who think the county seat of a county should be always located at the exact geographical center of a county; such an one will not be convinced by any argument that the county seat should not be at or near Boyne City. But I think most of us believe in the doctrine of the greatest good to the greatest number. Your extracted from the Sentinel always advocated that doctrine so long as Charlevoix was the point in question. If he was right then, where is he now? There never has been a time, from the organization of the county to the present time, but that Charlevoix could be reached easier by a greater number of people than any other point in the county; and there by right it ought to have remained until the county developed enough to show where the permanent center of convenience was likely to be. I have not been trying to prove that East Jordan is the center of population or that it ever will be, or that the county seat ought always to remain there. It is answer to-day the center of population and the commercial center is not Boyne City. It was removed there by the votes of the eastern towns for some wise purpose, much against the wishes of this part of the county, and they were plainly told if they moved it there, there it might remain for the present, and at least some of us have not forgotten it. And why not leave it there for a time and let the county develope? It can remain there without expense to the county for a few years. It can be removed from there at any time, at least you can have the privilege of voting on the question, which you can never have when located at Boyne City; for I presume it will take no argument to show that it would be impossible to obtain the consent of two-thirds of the board of supervisors for its removal.

Does that Boyne City offers the use of county buildings free for a term of years if the county seat should be removed to that place. While I do not wish to say that they would repudiate any agreement made, I do wish to say they could do so without any fear of the consequence. They are no better or worse than the people of East Jordan or Charlevoix, but in the case of the two places there was, and is, a powerful incentive to keep them honest, which in the case of Boyne City is lacking.

In 1874, the center of population was near Ironton; in 1886, it is not far from it; every thing points to the fact that the center will not be far from that point.

It will either go towards East Jordan or Charlevoix, according to the respective growth of the two places; in either case further from Boyne City. Why not wait and see?

WILLIAM HARRIS.

Boyne City.

Boyne City, March 26, 1886.

EDITOR JOURNAL:—The virulence of many of the newspaper arguments, pro and con, relative to the final settlement of the county seat question the running election, has led to a great deal of confusion of thought on the part of readers. After it is over, as Bridgell, in the Spectator once said, "how many weighty reasons does a man recollect, which his heat and violence made him utterly forget?"

Perhaps it is difficult, amidst the squalling display of vituperation spread before us each week for our digestion (or indigestion), for any of the residents of this county to look at the question with unprejudiced comprehension.

What is the proposition? That the county seat shall be located as soon as possible at such a point as will be most convenient to the people of the county at large, not only for the present time, but especially for the future.

A continuation of this expensive contest disturbs the natural development of every portion of the county. Were this contest to cease now, not only would the agricultural interests of the county develope more rapidly, but the principal villages, especially on our lake shores, which naturally are largely independent of one another, would increase in wealth and population with a normal basis to develope from. Were the county seat located at the point now in contemplation a lasting impetus, it seems to your correspondent, would be given to the opening up and improvement and construction of numerous highways in the county that otherwise will, for a long period, remain unopened. No candid reasoner can look upon the construction of a bridge, or the establishment of a ferry, at Ironton as a myth. To vote against the removal of the county seat in the coming election may put a small stumbling block in the way of completion of such a great convenience to the public in the near future.

How do disinterested and unbiased people on this side of our county look upon this subject? A citizen of Allegheny City, Pa., says: "I have been watching your county seat question for the past ten years with no little interest. I see justice and equity to the people of Charlevoix county several fully better in the location of the county seat at Boyne City than elsewhere in the county."

"The Petoskey Democrat in regard to this "county seat question" says:

"An era of good feeling should exist between all sections, and would if this county seat question were settled. It seems to us that if the people of the county consult their own interest they will settle that vexed question once and forever at the coming election. In only one way can they do that, and that is by voting for Boyne City. Once there it will remain, as in two thirds vote to submit the question can ever be obtained again. If left at East Jordan the war will continue as the people of the county will never rest with that as their seat of justice. Boyne City is almost the center of the county, is just as near and accessible to East Jordan and Charlevoix as those towns are to it, while to reach either of those towns nearly one half of the people of the county have to go through Boyne City or go round outside the county through Petoskey. We repeat that if the people of that county are wise they will settle the question at the coming election, and settle it so that no more county seat wars will arise to burden the people with discord and taxes."

Spite engenders distrust, and because, perhaps at an unfortunate time and with discouraging steps have been taken towards the construction of a railroad, the construction of which would accomplish more than any other one project toward the development of our county, there are persons that are almost willing to disregard their own convictions that now, independent of the county seat question, active steps ought to be taken by all to make this project a surity. No one will deny that the railroad contemplated militates in favor of the location of the county seat at Boyne City, for, passing through it, it makes it of easy access to a large portion of our inhabitants. In view of the letters known to be received from the only proper authority relative to this subject it seems to your correspondent to be impolitic, at least, openly to stigmatize as false what is well known to be a verity, especially when it involves so greatly our public good. No one who reads the communications from Prest. Hughart can discern any enignatical or doubtful expression in them as to his intentions. Neither can any one substantiate a declaration that the communication mentioned as not verifiable, for they are several and not single, in the possession of as many witnesses. Are the people of Charlevoix county to have a railroad? If they will it. Then is it sagacious to continue this county seat warfare longer, thereby sapping our treasury and sustaining general dissensions, both of which unquivocally operate against general improvement? I trust, Mr Editor, that the voter at the coming election will so traduce his own good sense as to vote in opposition to what he knows to be for the general welfare of our people.

Reply to the Sentinel.

East Jordan, March 30, 1885.

EDITOR JOURNAL:—As we had occasion to say some weeks ago, the Sentinel makes it a point of its regular business to stir up ill feeling between different parts of the county. The people of your village need judge for themselves whether or not it is profitable for them to sustain the promoter of such mischief as we have undertake to offer on that point, but wish to call attention to the fact that for some months past, this plague spot region has been the object of its spite, notwithstanding the votes of our supervisors and people, which have always favored Charlevoix; and regardless of the large amount of trade that goes from this town to Charlevoix.

For instance in its issue of March 24th, several extracts from the Enterprise of last year, and pretends to hold the people here responsible for them.

It makes us feel a little mean to be obliged to get down to the low level of the Sentinel man, and there fight a skunk with another person's stink-pot, but in the interest of good society it seems necessary to do so, on this occasion. We therefore give you a few clippings from the Boyne City Statesman.

Feb. 25, 1885.—"In the past, nothing too contemptible and mean has been by Charlevoix to retard the growth of Boyne City or the east end of the county. * * * "The most despicable lies over told by human tongue, were told by them."

"The Sentinel has the audacity to assert that East Jordan has never lived Boyne City. Perhaps not; but we don't think it has ever hated her. We know Charlevoix always has, does now, and always will despise her."

"Again, they say East Jordan has voted almost solidly for Charlevoix, in preference to Boyne City for the county seat. Yes, we know she has made that mistake, but we think Charlevoix ought to forgive her. We have."

Mar. 19, 1885.—"Like Geo. Washington, we never lie; and when we assert that the amalgamation of the Sentinel, is a low, contemptible, low lived liar, and a most pusillanimous, selfish non entity in human form, as well as the most unprincipled, conceited wholp, by whom the editorial profession is so degraded at Charlevoix, we can safely assert what can easily be proven."

Much more of the same sort could be given, but this is sufficient. The Sentinel man has on several occasions talked about "licking the little dirt smoke me." What part is he licking now, if not the hand of those who snub Charlevoix and him?

We shall await the result of the vote in your town, with some curiosity to know whether such a man has the following there he professes to have.

Ironton.

Ironton, March 29, 1886.

EDITOR JOURNAL:—There is so much misleading, on the part of those in favor of removing the county seat to Boyne City, that my first resolution was not to put my pen to paper on the subject. But when, after the hand to hand fights with revolvers and rifle racks, in Boyne City, I met a man from that place who could discuss the question with fairness and candor, I felt compelled to write you the substance of his arguments, and attempt to show their fallacy.

My friend seemed burdened with the idea that Boyne City is, always was, and always will be, the place for the county seat, and that he who can not see this assumed intuitive fact is devoid of common intelligence. All opposition, therefore, is the outcome of depravity. He seemed to feel robbed of a possession, as one who had been stripped by a confidence man.

This is my friend's mistake. Men who differ from him are just as conscientious as he. Your paper, avoiding the mudslinging of the opposition, has many times shown the falsity of the geographical center argument, which seems to be the basis of my friend's "intuition," and I need make no further reply.

Another point he mentioned was that if Boyne gets the county seat now, that settles it forever, and stops expense (that is the expense of a future submission of the question). In this again, he is just enough right to be dangerously wrong. It would probably settle the question forever; in this he is right. But it would be, I fear, but the beginning if expense. There is nothing done on a town hall for the free use of the county, and I fear never will be; for it is already whispered that "if we can get the county to invest money here, its public offices will never leave us."

My friend thought it would be better for both agriculture and commerce to have the thing settled once for all; but I fear the burden of taxes for county purposes, would shackle agriculture and hamstring commerce. People slam a country that is so burdened with debt.

He had a great deal to say about the railroad, and relied on us for not putting more confidence in the letters received from Mr. Hughart on the subject. Of course I could but blame him for reading into these letters more than there is written. And besides he had to admit that he did not wonder that the confidence of such men as shaken by the publication of one of these letters in a garbled form.

I told him it was time enough to vote for Boyne City on account of her railroad after she has got it; and what I said to him, I say to all.

Cure for Piles.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has taken cold, or strained himself by lifting or exertion. At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, flatulency, uneasiness of the stomach, etc. A moisture, like perspiration, produces a very disagreeable itching, after getting warm in a common situation. Blind, bleeding and Itching Piles are well known to be dangerous and tedious to cure, and we would advise directly upon the parts affected, shortening the tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure. Price 50 cents, sold by Geo. W. Crouter. 152

KENTUCKY MOUNTAINEERS.

A People Sunk in Deplorable Ignorance.

These mountaineers are a singular people, writes a correspondent from Kentucky to the New York Times. They have not the slightest idea of law and order as it is understood and practiced in other portions of the country. Every individual presents an injury with a knife, pistol or gun, provided he has the requisite courage to do so, or, if not, waylays and shoots down his enemy whenever he can be caught off his guard. Like their prototypes who live in the mountains of Georgia, North Carolina and Tennessee, the Kentucky mountaineers are a peculiar set of people, differing in every way from the good inhabitants of these States. They are decidedly ignorant, and are utterly unlike to avail themselves of the proper process of the law. Their poverty and illiteracy are pitiable in the extreme; they know nothing whatever of the habits of the civilized world, and many have never been beyond the confines of their own counties. Their houses are mere cabins of logs and mud, and in some sent on the sight of a pane of glass would cause a sensation. The virtues they possess are purely primitive, suggesting the savage in many respects. They constitutely honest as to rights of property; they do not steal, outrages are no common, but a failure to be chaste carries a resultant humiliation caused much misery. With such a condition of things surrounding them, it is easy matter for a few bold, resolute, but reckless men to dominate the whole country. Those who are not killed do from diseases peculiar to people who do not compreend that cleanliness is next to godliness. The term "mudsand" or "mule" is never heard. It is "say man" or "my woman." Nine-tenths of these mountaineers were in the Union army, and tonight with a courage and fierceness that swept everything before them. Their names indicate a English origin, as, for instance, in Bell county, in Harlan county, as well as in contiguous sections, you find lots of Howards, Turners, Parsifalls, probably a corruption of the old Saxon name Percival, Blantons, Bates, Jones, Jacksons, Lees, Grants, Thomas, Holmes, Ingle, Ingleharts and Ingleses, Mills, Millers, Miller, Bryants, Bryans, Bryan, Brown, Browns, Bowlins, Bowlin, Bowling, Bowlings, Bowling, Bowlin, Bowlins, Bowlin, Bowlins, Bowlin, Bowlins

Senator Harris, of Tennessee, appeared before the Pan-Electric investigation committee at Washington on the 21st ult., and gave testimony as to the organization of the Pan-Electric Company, which agreed with the statements already made by other witnesses. When asked if there were any suspicions that the company should profit by the official position of any of the stockholders, he replied emphatically that there was no such idea. And I am sure further that if it had been intimated to me that any official action as a Senator was to be involved, directly or indirectly, it would have ended forever all negotiations." The witness went into the whole subject at length, but there were no points brought out not covered in previous evidence.

POLITICAL.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Conferences between Jay Gould and T. V. Powderly at New York, on Sunday and Monday evening, March 18, resulted in advices from each of them to the parties to the Southwestern strike, directing immediate resumption of work and traffic pending arbitration. A New York dispatch of Monday says: The great strike on the Gould system of railroads is ended, and work has been resumed on about 5,000 miles of road. In response to an invitation from Jay Gould, Mr. Terence Powderly, Master Workman of the Knights of Labor, went to the railroad magnate's residence yesterday morning. Mr. Gould and Mr. Powderly discussed the strike from its very beginning. The conference lasted until one o'clock and was again renewed in the evening. During the conference the railroad king intimated that he was tired of strikes, and hoped for another method of settling labor troubles. Mr. Powderly told him that the Knights of Labor had long since abandoned a method of settling the dispute of the arbitrators. He also said that in future this would be the method employed to settle all disputes between his company and its employees. At the close of the evening talk, Mr. Powderly sent a message of the Executive Board of the Knights. A. W. Hayes, of New Jersey, and H. Hayes, of Michigan, were present. The message was brief, and at the conclusion of the following dispatch was sent:

Martin J. Lynch, of Lodge 101, Chairman of Executive Board District Assembly 101, Knights of Labor:

President Jay Gould has consented to our proposition for arbitration and we telegraph Master Workman Hayes, of Executive Board, to order men to resume work on terms of Union Pacific settlement.

T. V. POWDERLY,
General Master Workman.

Mr. Powderly also sent the following order to the strikers:

To the Knights of Labor now on strike in the Southwest:

President Jay Gould has consented to our proposition for arbitration and has so telegraphed to Vice President Hoxie. Pursuant to telegraphic instructions to Martin Lynch, Chairman of the Executive Board of District Assembly No. 101, you are directed to resume work at once on terms of the Union Pacific settlement.

T. V. POWDERLY,
General Master Workman.

Jay Gould issued the following message to Vice President Hoxie, of the Missouri Pacific Railroad, at St. Louis:

In resuming the movement of trains on the Missouri Pacific, and in the engaging of laborers in the several departments of that company, give preference to our late employees, whether they have left or have remained at their posts, you will not employ any person who has injured the company's property, during the late strike.

Nor will we discharge any person who has taken the place of a striking employee during the strike. We can with the greatest ease settle any differences between the employes and the company, past or future. JAY GOULD, President.

"The great strike in the Southwest, contrary to general expectation, is not ended yet," says a New York dispatch of the 22d ult. "Jay Gould read the papers yesterday morning and concluded that Mr. Powderly was laboring under a mistake in thinking that he (Gould) had agreed to any sort of arbitration. Gould nevertheless addressed a note to Powderly to the effect. That upon the latter remarked his order to the men to return to work. An appointment for a conference between the two men was made, but owing to the sickness of Mr. Powderly he was unable to appear."

There was a prolonged conference in Chicago on March 20 and 21 between at New York on Thursday, March 20. "The whole discussion," a New York telegram reports, "was on the subject of arbitration, the question whether unanimity of opinion was expressed. Mr. Gould is in favor of arbitration, but as the matter of adjusting the difficulties on the Missouri Pacific Railroad had been referred to Mr. Hoxie, the following telegram was sent to him at the request of Mr. Powderly:

The visible supply of wheat and corn is respectively, 49,773,391 and 16,795,072 bushels. Since last report wheat decreased 261,168 bushels, while corn increased 49,856 bushels.

A negro named John Drake was executed at Thomaston, Ga., for the murder of his wife and the execution of her corpse.

"Martin Lynch, Chairman of the Executive Committee of District Assembly No. 101, which embraces all Knights of Labor employes by the Missouri Pacific Railroad Company," says a St. Louis dispatch of the 1st inst., "telegraphed to the different local assemblies under his jurisdiction, notifying them officially that the General Executive Board had ordered all men to go to work pending arbitration of the existing difficulties by a committee of the Missouri Pacific employes and Mr. Hoxie. Chairman Hoxie was seen by a reporter, and, when asked if he considered the basis for a settlement of the strike a sufficient recognition of the Knights of Labor, said: Yes, it is virtually, but almost immediately modified his utterance by adding, 'to some extent.' The basis agreed upon for the appointment of an arbitration committee to adjust the differences existing between the Missouri Pacific employes and their employers will affect only indirectly the strike upon the Union Pacific. It is a generally accepted fact, however, that the strikes which have occurred since the inauguration of the Missouri Pacific strike were in sympathy with the latter, and when the latter is settled all will be settled. Chairman Lynch, of the Knights of the Gas Strikers, in Dorland, Bevilles, Jessel, and Lemkon place works were locked and disarmed, involving a loss of $1,000,000, and throwing thousands of persons out of employment. The rolling mills at Monessen were locked by strikers. Gangs of strikers are everywhere in the mining counties forcing the miners out, and are going along pulling the factories.

Queen Victoria has accepted the resignations of Joseph Chamberlain and G. O. Trevelyan of Gladstone's Cabinet, and the office of Secretary for Scotland will be tendered to the Earl of Dalhousie.

The fund to be presented to Mr. Thomas Scott, its great Irish orator, now amounts to $12,000.

The Senegambians have rebelled against French authority and are up in arms. In a recent attack on the invaders they killed one soldiery and wounded thirty-two.

Probably owing to the vigorous measures of the Government, the riotous demonstrations in Belgium are subsiding. The entire regular military force of the kingdom is under arms.

A bill to permit cremation has been adopted by the French Chamber of Deputies by a large majority.

Work has been resumed in all the harbors and collieries in the Charleroi district of Belgium.

Prince Leopold Grevy of the French Republic has received a letter threatening him with violence. His house is guarded by police.

Greece still continues her war preparations, and the London Times declares that a conflict with Turkey may be expected within a week.

The roof of the theater at Heroomal, Japan, caved in from the weight of snow, 156 persons being killed or wounded.

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

"A serious hitch exists between the Executive Committee of the Knights of Labor and the railroad officials regarding the terms on which the knights are to be taken back, and from present appearances the strike is as far from settlement as ever," says a St. Louis telegram of the 23d inst. A committee of seven is waited upon Master Workman Hayes by the Missouri Pacific shops and yardmen, and the services of the old shop employes. A list of 400 names was handed to Mr. Hayes, and, after examining it, checked off a number of them as the names of the men where he would accept. The others, he said, could not be taken back. Attempts of a similar nature were made by committees of the strikers at Carondelet, Sedalia and other Gould centers. In every instance, the Executive Board claims, the committees received the same reply to their offers. Reports of the committees, received by telegraph, determined the Executive Board to issue an address to the public, and to continue the strike until the roads consented to take back all the strikers. The address is as follows:

To the Public:

Attention is called to the scarcity of freight and passengers in their treatment of the kingdom of Labor. We, representing the Knights of Labor, as your general executive board, are thinking of a remedy for the existing evils, and would respectfully request the public to assist us in our work, and to its manner would be very acceptable. Our order is not responsible for the recent strikes, a loosing or causing these with our consent, and we have ordered our men back to their employers. Mr. Hoxie has agreed to arbitrate the matter in dispute.

We, the undersigned, do not wish to injure the strikers personally, and through his generosity we have obtained for them a fair and just and equitable settlement, and we do not believe any man will be in favor of our boys being kept out of work, and we know that we will be in a position to do all we can for them. We, the undersigned, have been in failing all the world for a fair and just settlement, and we have succeeded, and we do not wish to long suffering longer, and we do not wish to see our boys starve and their families suffer, and we do not wish to see our country go to ruin, and we do not wish to see our country go to ruin, and we do not wish to see our country go to ruin

At Grand Rapids, the fusion ticket was elected with the exception of the police justiceship, which was secured by an independent democrat, while a republican was elected director of the poor.

At Saginaw City, the democrats and republicans fused to oppose the labor party, and the fusion candidate was elected by a majority of 311. Democrats elect a majority of the aldermen.

At Jackson, Clarence H. Bennett (dem) was elected mayor by 845 majority. The democrats also have four majority in the city council.

At Ishpeming the Knights of Labor elected the full city ticket. Christian Melby for mayor had 701 majority.

At East Saginaw the democrats have elected the mayor, treasurer, and justice of the peace, the republicans having the recorder and one majority in the council.

At Bay City, the contest resulted in the election of a greenback recorder, a democratic justice and three supervisors, and one republican supervisor.

At Muskegon, L. G. Mason (dem.) was elected mayor by a majority of 300. The democrats also got three out of four aldermen.

At Big Rapids, the democratic and greenback union ticket was elected by majorities ranging from 80 to 214.

At Battle Creek, Henry Hall, republican, was elected mayor by a majority of 421.

Teach the Children Drawing.

The Providence Journal has a long editorial article headed "Teach the Children to Draw," in the course of which it expresses some sensible ideas. The development of a child's mind, it says, is an epitome of the mental evolution of the race. Long before the printed page has any meaning for him, picture-writing is sought. His instincts seek him the medium with which to express his ideas, and he naturally adopts a bold and broad style. A piece of chalk and a board fence, or a bit of charcoal and a whitewashed wall, prove irresistible. Happy for him if school parents furnish him with a blackboard where he can (what) cover with the creations of his fancy. As an illustration of the practical value of a knowledge of drawing, the Journal adds:

"Also, as nearly every manufactured article first takes visible shape on paper, it is of inestimable value to any man to be able to draw or to translate a working drawing correctly. James Nasmyth, in his special autobiography, tells how much he owed to his unerring eye for drawing while planning his great steam hammer and other world-known inventions. He also tells an amusing story of stopping at a cottage in a little foreign town and trying to make the good woman understand that he wished for a meal. She laughed merrily when he at length pulled out his sketch-book and drew a fowl, a loaf of bread and a bottle of wine, with a plate, knife and fork on a table, and soon a fine dinner was placed before him. Many a young girl, though she may never aspire to be an artist, finds her pleasure in fancy work greatly increased when she is able to design and draw her own patterns."

Improved Demand for Labor.

There is a gradual taking up of disemployed labor in several lines of manufacturing, but at a few the number of hands is being reduced. In all branches of house-building work is active. In car building and foundry-work more is going on. The hardware establishments of New England have been kept pretty busy. Eastern Pennsylvania shops are engaged on special lines of work and are busy. Machine-shop work is picking up all over the country. An abundance of orders is looked for by leading Philadelphia manufacturers in iron, textiles, machinery, engines, and special machinery. The winter, it is thought, will be a busy and prosperous one, from present indications. Every one has confidence in big spring trade, and all are anxious to be ready for it in capacity and with stock. At best, however, there will be constant cause of complaint. Competition must of necessity always be present, and be a source of more or less evil. The higher earning power of money is seeking to ease up the laborer. Increasing savings for labor are being opened up by the diversification of labor, but on the other hand machinery improvements are hedging labor off. The capacity of the masses to consume has been met but in small part. It is in the supplying of their undeveloped requirements that the future industrial development will be made.—Cincinnati Gazette.

It is a question whether Mr. Crankshank will ever cease to smile again. Why? When he goes out into the street, the county seat news comes to him like a tickling tale, and when he goes back home that 10 lb. boy, born Friday morning does but increase the smile.

Mrs. A. M. Parmenter has our thanks for two beautiful oil paintings of Mackinac island scenery, the product of her own genius and skill. All her work shows her to be an artist of much merit. She is giving lessons to a select class now, and contemplates organizing a larger class at an early date. All who wish lessons should certainly call upon her.

From a communication from a resident of Hayes township, it is apparent that the Wilson Hoop Co., of South Arm, is a benefit not only to the township in which it is located, but to this part of the county as well, the company having paid out in Hayes township alone nearly three thousand dollars for timber during the past winter.

The Charlevoix Minstrels closed their season's engagment, at the opera hall, last Friday night. The proceeds were donated to the Boy's Band fund. This coming so close to other charitable doings was not so liberally attended though a fairly good and appreciative audience greeted the boys, in their closing appearance. The program being changed, and a short time to prepare in necessitated a few delays, otherwise all passed off pleasantly. The tripple tongue solo, by Prof. Bert Jarvis, deserves special mention, since it was a very difficult tripple tongue production, and was executed nobly. This young artist has few superiors, and deserves the praise so lavishly bestowed. The troupe will reorganize next winter, and travel a larger territory visiting all sister villages, and then press towards the south during the cold weather, and should the same participants continue, success is imminent.

Going west passengers leaving Cheboygan on the steamer T. S. Faxton will connect with the City of Traverse, arriving early Friday morning following.

Mr. Krebs, with the Kilbourne Milling Co., expects his family on the Faxton. The captain has told them to be in readiness against the first report that the bay is open.

The Historical Society.

The society passed another pleasant evening at the parlors of Mrs. O. D. Wood, whose hospitality it has so frequently enjoyed. President Green was in the chair; but the attendance was comparatively meager, on account of the entertainment at the opera hall.

The program was as follows:

F. W. Craine & Co.'s Opening.

Last Saturday was opening day with F. W. Craine & Co., and their elegant new store was thronged with customers all day. During part of the forenoon, and all the afternoon, three or four extra clerks were kept busy, not simply showing the goods, but making actual sales. The remark was frequently made that no such stock of goods was ever before spread out in a Charlevoix store. With so complete a stock, so attractively displayed in an elegant sales room, the energetic managers cannot fail to continue on the broad road of popularity and prosperity.

Ironton.

Friday evening, Rev. C. F VanAuken delivered his long promised temperance lecture—long deferred by reason of ill-health and inclement weather. He chose for his text: "He not deceived," and spoke with such eloquence and earnestness, that when the ladies of the W. C. T. U. passed among the audience with the pledge, fifty men signed it. After singing, "Bringing in the sheaves," Rev. Parmenter closed by a few well-chosen remarks, saying, "Brother VanAuken has succeeded admirably in enrolling, but the ladies have had even the better success in raking in and binding the sheaves.

FLORENCE VANE.

BY PHILIP PENDLETON COOKE.

I loved thee long and dearly,
Florence Vane;
My life's best hopes and early
Were crowned in thee alone;
I mourn in tears and anguish
My lost estate, poor Vane;
My heart, alas, can relish
Nought else on earth, Vane.

The rain beat heavily,
Vane, Vane,
When, then, did back my story,
At eve, fall—
That spoke love's blandish,
Of sky and pale
Pine my pain—
Florence Vane!

Thou wert tender-hearted,
Vane, Vane,
Tender as the roses
In their prime,
Thy tenderness lies closed
Of sweetest dreams
Thy bosom, Vane, Vane,
Wilt feel a sadness
Would I but breathe love now,
Florence Vane!

But faintest, coldest wonder!
Thy glorious eye—
Lieth beneath a shroud—
Alas the day!
And it looks not to remember
Thy lover's love,
To quicken love's pale ember,
Florence Vane.

The lilies of the valley
By young maidens sung;
The dead leaves lie dally
Where I have strayed;
May their bloom in beauty spring;
Their music be
Where thou swetly part is lying,
Florence Vane!

GLORINDA PERRIVALE'S LOVERS.

BY PAUL FASTNOW.

There was no mistaking it—Elphalet Babbitt was in love. He had all the general symptoms of the species of heart disease, and seemed quite unconscious himself. He had his appetite, and that was no small loss to Elphalet, though it was a great joke to the family. He grew tragedy and absent-minded, and was falling into a habit of sighing every few weeks—at noon and evening, and lying on his back under the trees. These, of course, were only general symptoms, but Elphalet developed others almost as clear of himself. For instance, when he went to work in the woodmeadow he invariably put on his Sunday clothes, even to his kid gloves and stiff bell-crowned hat. Thus equipped, he would wage his scythe—or his axe and work steadily toward the little willow tree with the rustic seat, which he patted fondly with his confession. Clorinda was an inveterate flirt. Unfortunately, she had lost her mother when a mere child, and, without the restraining influence of womanhood upon her girlish playfulness and love of admiration, had devoted herself to a life of excitement and pleasure, which had gradually become the very breath of life to her.

Elphalet Babbitt was among the latest of her admirers. He had been at school for six years, vainly attempting to polish his rough nature, and had left it with the gloss of culture; and now, but little changed—the same awkward, good-natured, bashful, blundering, but capable fellow—he had returned home, to display the Greek words in his hair with lapsed, and get rid of the scale mass of philosophies and sciences which he had gorged, by a judicious sprinkling of plain home duties, and occasional ejectations of local vernacular. He had met Clorinda Perrivale frequently since his return, at church, at picnics, and at home, and had fallen irretrievably in love with the village belle.

During the course of the summer in which our story opens, "Clorinda Perrivale's love-making" had become the subject of so much ill-considered village gossip that, one evening, as she sat with her father on the little honeysuckle-covered porch in front of the cottage, he had said to her: "My girl, you have had your lovers now for so long that don't you think you could decide upon one for your partner in life?" Then, in answer to the girl's quick look of apprehension and pain, he had quickly gone on to tell her of the village talk; of his own fear that she was transgressing the bounds of conventional propriety by admitting equally the warm attentions of so many young men; and finally, to ask her if, for his sake, and the sake of her dead mother, she would either cease giving encouragement to her suitors, or choose one of them, as her natural lear was sweet will, for life. It was a plain, serious talk, such as every father of a motherless girl is bound and privileged to have, when the strange, wayward age of girlhood is budding into womanhood. Clorinda listened with downcast eyes, and when he had finished she came and sat in his lap and laid her warm cheek against his, and said, with tears: "Father, you are right; I have been very thoughtless, and I thank you for what you have said. Good-night!" and then—she ran away upstairs to her own room, and cast herself on the bed, and wept, not bitterly, but tenderly, until the shadows of night, and the stillness, and the sense broaded over the world, and she fell asleep.

Fourth-of-July night there was to be a great and glorious celebration, with speeches and cannon and fireworks, in the little city of Marlboy, six miles down the river. Everyone and boy in Newville had shaped his affairs during the previous six weeks to be the one special end of attending the grand consummation on that night. Nobody, Clorinda Perrivale, merry and mischievous as an elven after her tears, but this time with a pure and sweet purpose in her merriment, conceived the idea of treating her devoted swains upon that memorable occasion, and chasing him whose love for her should prove paramount to his love for Chinese Brownies and solidifying eloquence. She she managed to convey to each of her suitors simply the information that she would be at home on Fourth-of-July night and should very much like the pleasure of his company at that time. Scheming, too, in the manner of the invitation seemed to lend it, it was of a special interest to the person addressed. Among the rest, Elphalet Babbitt received the message of the fair Clorinda, and instantly all visions of pyrotechnic display and enchanting music vanished from his mind, and his heart went pitapat with joy's alternate hope and fear. Now Elphalet was a shrewd fellow, and by dint of considerable prying about, and keeping his eyes and ears open, he found out that he was not the only one appointed to meet the bewitching Clorinda upon the evening in question. Some half-score rivals crowded his questions about going to Marlboy in such a manner that he was sure they were intending to keep the appointment with Miss Perrivale. Elphalet went home and pondered upon the matter. He reflected that, if Clorinda were indulging in make-believe from a suspicion of exaggeration of some lover, the young man should not merely dress and come down up to fall," he would stand a pretty poor chance. If there were only some way of getting rid of his rivals! If he could think of some plan to keep them away on the eventful night, and leave it open to his rivals that they owed him about for than they had about a nagging fun in Marlboy, why, his suit would be as good as won, for Elphalet had spent months and months in the long-bounded and most agreeable young man that ever walked. Elphalet put on his thinking cap, and dwelt it tighter than ever during the hours he spent in the wood-meadow, and, he ended up by taking a strong dislike to his hat and hanging down the whole afternoon in an unusual fit of idleness, pillows, blankets, and bedposts.

Any one loitering around the Babbitt homestead at about sunset on that night in question, could have seen a strange sight in the corners of the lilac of July, in which a tall, gaunt, young man, with a pale face and black, coarse hair, was seen to lay down on his back, and, gazing from the shed door, with a pair of big, bright eyes, in the direction of the Marlboy road, would kick his heels in the air.

Late in the afternoon of Elphalet's bad mood, he had gone to the village, and had gone to his mother, and in that part was kind, when a hanger-on, the regular path of Clorinda Perrivale's suitors, had come to meet another young man over the fence, and had stopped and asked him, in the course of his chat, if he was going to Marlboy to-night. This took this path because it was difficult to be sociable with Elphalet, unless it thrust the designs aside necessarily, and he was not in a humor for that. Perhaps, also, he felt a little jealous of the girl's dark proud, and, as he was the only one who had seen the form of his rivals, he was, in a way, the friend of Elphalet. It was on that friendly footing, at least, and he might a great smile on his face, and he pursued his way across the fields to the self-satisfied Elphalet, who had put in hard with his hoe upon the already mown, and in the shed with a cooling breeze, and a pipe and chewing round, as he climbed the fence and approached the log bridge over the brook. Looking cut fully about him to see that no one was within sight, he sat down the long bank of pebbles of the log, with his back to his Perrivale cottage, opened his pipe, dipped the bowls in the bird, and passed to apply a liberal coating out of the already smooth-worn bag, as he latched a long backward toward the opposite bank, and then fell into a position he did pull and pull under the bank and looked up the path to the cottage. Clorinda was sitting on her front porch, with the two-year-old baby, which he drew near, and she merrily bade him come in without knocking. Oh, how happy did she looked rocking back and forth in the dusk-light, against the background of the vine, her pure, white dress of muslin but half covering her rounded white arms and marble shoulders! Elphalet slowly sat down on the edge of a chair, and tamed his hat crowned hat round and round in his nervous hands. They talked—or rather, she talked—pleasantly and quickly for a little while, listening to the passes to the monotonous chirp, chirp of the cricket and the croaking of the frogs on the banks of the brook. Deeper and deeper grew the shadows, till the figure in white seemed like a substanceless thing seen dimly in a chasm and the figure in black had almost melted into the darkness of the night. The girl had ceased to talk much. Her face was turned away from Elphalet, and she seemed to be looking out anxiously, as she rocked, through the narrow space of the vine. At length a loud silence prevailed. Elphalet's tongue was so dry that he could not speak, and his wits were deer still of words to speak to the beautiful girl, with her thoughts apparently so far away from him. Suddenly there was a heavy splash from the brook below. "Oh, my!" cried Clorinda, starting as if suddenly wakened from a dream. "That rock has fallen out of the bank—I knew it would!"

"What rock, Clorinda?" asked Elphalet, hitching his chair a little nearer in the dark, under cover of the sound of his voice. "Do you mean the big rock by the bridge?"

"Yes," answered Clorinda. "Did you notice it?"

"I guess I did," exclaimed Elphalet, glad to get upon a subject of conversation in that lying moment. "I heard that rock was going to fall, and I told your father so. Did it frighten you, Clorinda?" Here he started to hitch a little nearer, but his chair stuck, and he forbore.

"Yes, it did," admitted the girl. "I must have been thinking—"

Splash!

"Gosh, what a noshrat!" exclaimed Elphalet, the cold sweat starting out all over him. "Wish I'd a been there with a gun!"

"Was it a noshrat?" asked Clorinda, curiously. "It didn't sound like a stone."

"Yes, it was," answered Elphalet, roundly. "I know a noshrat splash, every time. Did you ever see a noshrat, Clorinda?" (Creak, creak, from the chair.)

"No, I never did," exclaimed Clorinda; "but I have seen lots of—"

"Sh'e! I, sa'e 1!" exclaimed Elphalet immediately tickled at the comedy. "When the brook gets down real low and lazy's over, so there won't be anybody round to bother us, I'll show you noshrats in a spacious of sort, all in a—"

Splash!

"That was a fish!" cried Clorinda, positively.

"No, 'twas no 'tum," asserted Elphalet, and his chair made a long, scraping sound on the floor. "Say, Clorinda, do you like to fish?"

"Yes, I do—very much."

"Sho! I'd, sh, sh. So do—I!" Elphalet was sucking the round his hollow-crowned hat, and bending forward, and looking up sideways through the darkness at the figure in white. "Clorinda—will you go fishing with me some time?"

"Perhaps so, Elphie—Mr. Babbitt."

"No, no, he!" from Elphalet. Scrape, creak, creak! from the chair.

"Say, Clorinda—I'm glad I didn't go to the fireworks to-night."

"Why, Elphie?"

"Because—because all the other boys went, you know, and—here, here, Clorinda—"

Splash! splash!

"Bull-frogs!" exclaimed Elphalet. "Two of 'em together, by the great horn spoon!"

"How do you know they were bull-frogs, Elphalet?"

"I heard 'em croak, didn't you?"

"Why, Elphalet, I heard some—more like a nigger whistle."

"Oh, no! that was me, I was just going to say something."

"Why, Elphalet?"

"I—I like you pretty well, Clorinda!" Scrape, scrape, from the chair. Elphalet was very close now. He put out his arms as if he meant to put them around her, and the chair stopped rocking. "Clorinda, I—"

Splash! splash! preceded the noise of further words, and Clorinda, with a little laugh, ran up the path. It was so elated that he forgot all about the lately broken chair, and, with her little room over the porch, thought the fourth heaven.

Bill Nye on Hydrophobia.

I take occasion at this time to ask the American people to see now and at once to do to prevent the spread of the most insidious and deadly disease known as hydrophobia. When a Ethiopian is bitten by a mad dog he should at once go right home to his family and bid them farewell. He should let his hair lay and let his beard grow. It was my first impulse to do so, but I was so much frightened that I forgot it. As I ran home I was overtaken by a dog, who, as I am not a mild dog myself, I felt that I could not stand. The dog's teeth left their mark upon my ankle, and I am not a mild dog myself. I ran home and I ran and I ran. I ran so fast that I forgot to stop at the house and let my family know that I was bitten by a mad dog, and I am not a mild dog myself. I ran on

Around the County.

The County Seat.

East Jordan, April 6, 1886.

EDITOR JOURNAL.—I have a pleasant duty to perform in behalf of the people of this village and region; it is to thank the people of Charlevoix and elsewhere, who have in this county-seat contest, insisted by their votes, upon the greatest good to the greatest number, and have therefore decided to let the county seat remain, for the present where it is. We feel joyful, and hope to show, when opportunity arises, that we are not ungrateful, for the favor shown this village.

And while we are in the mood, it will not be amiss to offer a little good advice to the man who has prided himself upon being our greatest enemy. To that end we should first see what ails him. Evidently the focus of his intellectual vision has been shortsighted for years, until he sees nothing but himself, and of himself has but the most imperfect view. We would indulge the hope, faint though it be, that he will soon cease to admire his outward appearance, and turn his attention inwardly, for there he will see the trouble; indeed it is perfectly apparent to the meest tyro in philosophical ethics. He would see a much twisted duodenum, receiving a bad quality of pancreatic juice from a compressed pancreas. He would see a spleen so large as to outweigh all the rest of his individuality, and probably having attached to it many large, whitish, pulpy excrescences. He would find a diseased liver, secreting bile, all the properties of which are almost except it be bitterness. Proceeding upward with the examination he would reach the lazin box, and find it, (though much swollen), nearly empty. And there is to be found the explanation of the pulpy excrescences above spoken of,—his brain has gone down and attacked itself to his spleen. Through long bad usage it has vacated its high normal seat to occupy a low abnormal one.

If at this stage of his self-examination, some good spirit would throw a gleam of light athwart his vision, he would see that he, with his aforesaid twisted duodenum, compressed pancreas, enlarged spleen, diseased liver, and swollen, though almost empty brain box, is fast going to the "how wows," and that unless he forthwith changes his course, and amend his manners, he will soon "get there."

We could enlarge upon this subject, and suggest a remedy, but prefer to entrust his case to other friends, who live nearer to him and understand him perfectly—simply suggesting that he should consult the best of them without the least delay, and feeling assured that if he will read and heed what I have written in this letter, he will soon come heartily thank and bless the JOURNAL and Temperance Revival at Ironton.

Fifty new names on the pledge. Rev. Mr. VanAnken, and Rev. Mr. Parmenter attended the W. C. T. U. monthly temperance meeting last Friday, evening at Ironton, and the union gathered a very handsome harvest. Mr. VanAnken, is reported to have delivered a very able address, after which the pledge was passed through the congregation, and obtained fifty new names of men, young and old, after singing, "Where is my boy to night." Mr. Parmenter, was called out, and spoke briefly, congratulating the youngest of the sisterhood of villages, on the momentum, which the temperance cause has attained, winding up as follows: "Glory to God, for the advancement of the temperance cause. Fifty new votes in the songs of triumph; fifty vows registered on earth and in heaven. Tell it in Gath; and publish it in the streets of Askelon; and among all the villages: The W. C. T. U. has gathered, in two hours, fifty sheaves in the temperance harvest, Mr. VanAnken did the cutting and the binding.

Why is it?

And still the saloons go right along no failures, no foreclosures, no assignments. The business is prosperous. The man of the bar grows fat, and independent, and soon gets rich. Men in legitimate and necessary branches of business, with large capital invested, with utmost vigilance and intense application to their business, struggle hard against the pressure of the times, staving off clamoring creditors, in the vain hope that something will turn up to free them from their embarrassment, but after all their honest and long continued struggle they fail at last. Why is it? Men who patronize the saloons will willingly plank down the full price demanded, for their drink, without asking a question, knowing that the saloon keeper is charging them from three to five hundred per cent., but they ask no questions, make no complaints at extravagant charges, and generally ask for no credit. Why is it? Men and women go to the dry goods, grocery or boot and shoe stores expecting to buy goods at a fraction above cost, and before it they can—the same man who pays the saloon keeper five hundred per cent., profit, without complaining, will Jew the hardware man down to cost of goods if he can. Why is it? Men who pay the saloon man cash down for every drink will go to the shoe store and ask for a credit of six months, and then let it run twelve months or two years, if not pushed, leaving the merchant to carry a burden of interest, which is ruinous. Why is this?

Can the citizens of Charlevoix not see that their welfare is at stake? Every few days some hard failing business man has to succumb to the pressure, but the saloons go on, absorbing the money that ought to go into legitimate business, and purchase the necessaries of life for the liquor made sufferers of our village. The saloon men bear comparatively none of the burden of the times. They have but a small amount of capital invested, while nearly all branches of honorable business require large capital, and it is taxed to pay the cost of crime caused by the saloon men. How unjust! Will the business men of Charlevoix remain satisfied to allow the whiskeyites to absorb the resources of the people of the county, at the rate of five hundred per cent profit on their goods, while they are compelled to sell legitimate merchandise at profits ranging from nothing to twenty five per cent? If the money spent in this village for liquor, for the past five years, had been expended in the purchase of food, clothing, building material, books and articles of home adornment, every family in the county would probably now live in a comfortable dwelling, with good clothes and plenty to eat; and the merchants of our village could all have met their claims and to-day be doing double their present business.

Now I propose henceforth that the people of Charlevoix buy their liquor on "tick," at twenty-five percent profit to the whiskey man, and pay cash down to the honest merchant, at a profit that will give him an honest living, and see what the result will be.

ECONOMY.

Cure for Piles.

Piles are frequently prevented by a wrye or weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has some affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, flatulency, uneasiness of the stomach, with costiveness, are manifest, and many other very disagreeable feelings, after eating, which are common to dyspepsia. Dr. Bennett's Pile and Itching Piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Bennett's Pile Remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure. Price 50 cents. Sold by Geo. W. Crouter. 152

Guizot's France

CELEBRATED HISTORY OF FRANCE from the Earliest Times to 1848. By M. GUIZOT, Prime Minister of France, continued from his notes, by his daughter, MME. GUIZOT DE WITT. Complete in 5 vols., large 12mo., bound elegantly in fine cloth, gilt tops. A new edition just issued, reduced in price to $6.00, including postage. This is much the best edition published of this magnificent work, which is known as the best popular history of France. The cost of the imported edition, with substantially the same illustrations is $36.00, which this is certainly the best in form, and the most desirable for the library. "THE MATCHLESS BRILLIANCY of Guizot's style, his graphic descriptions of men and events, his painstaking minuteness of detail, the lucidity and ease of his style and the admirable philosophic reflections, all combine to render it worthy of the description it bears as the most popular history of France. It is as fascinating as a novel, and as life-like as a theatrical representation of the events and personages it describes. How the set can be sold for that price remains, after much reflection, a mystery, for the work is not sham work, it is well done; altogether it is a marvel of cheapness. Mr. Alden has done much for the cause of good literature, but nothing better than this."—Daily Times, Buffalo, N.Y. "What VICTOR HUGO is in fiction, Cousin in philosophy, Guizot is in history. Among Frenchmen he had but few peers."—Christian Leader, Boston, Mass. "IT IS FAR THE best history of France that has been written. It is a wonder of cheapness."—Christian Advocate, Richmond, Va. Concise Record of the Week.

EASTERN.

R. A. Fullgraff, a member of the Board of Aldermen of New York, has been arrested for bribery in connection with the Broadway Railroad franchise.

A train on the Fitchburg Railroad jumped the track near West Deerfield, Mass., the cars dashing down an embankment 20 feet in height, some of them falling into the river. Reports from the scene of the wreck state that thirteen bodies had been recovered, but it was feared others were swept down the stream. Several persons have died of their injuries, and of the fifty or more wounded some will not survive.

WESTERN.

The grain-commission firm of Hoeksor, Crittenden & Co. of Detroit, Mich., which has branch houses in Milwaukee and Chicago, has been forced to suspend, the embarrassment being caused, it is understood, by the unprofitable speculation indulged in by one of the junior members.

Two Western railroads report the following earnings for the month of March: Chicago & Northwestern, $1,28,587, an increase over the same month last year of $2,849; Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha, $57,980, an increase of $22,800.

The labor troubles in the Southwest have had a depressing effect on the lumber trade, and mill-owners in Wisconsin are reported to be undecided in regard to setting the mill machinery in motion.

Flint and Daly, who engaged in a prize-fight in a room at St. Louis, were arrested under the State law making the crime equals and abettors guilty of felony. A prominent newspaper man held the stakes.

A fire which broke out at La Crosse, Wisconsin, in the mill of John Pettl extended to the yards of C. L. Lodinge, and thence to the sash factory, until the entire city was threatened. Assistance was sent from St. Paul, Minneapolis, Sparta and Winona. The loss is estimated at $1,99,000.

Mrs. Grindal, residding on a farm near Eau Claire, Wisconsin, gave birth to four healthy male babes.

At Charlton, Iowa, an old man named Charles Archibald was beaten to death with a soldering iron. Thomas Kelley and wife were arrested for the crime, on overwhelming evidence. In the room in Kelley's coal-shed was found $1,200, which is believed to have been the object of the murder.

After listening to a number of speeches at a meeting in front of the City Hall, a large body of East St. Louis strikers marched to the railway yards with the avowed determination of making everyone on duty quit work. Most of the engineers, firemen, and freight handlers obeyed without opposition. Sheriff Chapins, with drawn revolver, soon hooted at parties aside, and in some cases discarded. Finally a few determined men with leveled Winchesters swept the strikers, and they withdrew.

The Sunny-side Welcome arrived in Chicago the other day with clearance papers direct from Mobile, the trip having been made on the Gulf of Mexico and the Mississippi and Illinois Rivers.

The Gem City Flouring Mills at Quincy, Ill., were burned, the loss reaching $200,000. Fire also sets up was the mill stacks at Florence, Wis., causing a loss of $50,000.

SOUTHERN.

John Baxter, District Judge at Knoxville, Tennessee, died of congestive fever at Hot Springs, Ark., in his sixty-eighth year.

Before the Grand Jury at New Orleans this woman named M. Malon and Sophie made a full confession of their part in a scheme of perjury designed to secure the acquittal of the assassins of Captain Murphy, on one of a number of bonds warrants. Dr. Emmanuel E. Dreyfus was sent to the parish prison in default of $20,000 bail. Judge Thomas Ford, the chief of the band of assassins, is Consul-general of the Louisiana penitentiary, and he never has complied to wear the uniform.

The great railway strike has culminated in bloodshed at Fort Worth, Texas. A posse of deputies from the Sheriff's office were detailed to protect a train which was pulled out of the Missouri Pacific yards. They were fired upon from ambush by the strikers and one of the officers was killed, two severely wounded, and one of the strikers was hurt. It was rumored that the strikers threatened to burn the town. The Governor ordered out the State troops.

The merchants of Key West, Fla., have issued an appeal to the benevolent citizens of the United States for subscriptions in aid of those left destitute by the recent conflagration there.

The Boise Territory Committee has decided to report adversely all bills to create the Territory of Oklahoma on the ground that the Government has no right to the land now existing in trust.

Solicitor General Goode testified before the Pacific Electric Investigating committee at Washington, on cross examination, that he was not aware of money any globe or unusual basis in ordering the suit against the Bell Company. If he had known of the affair, he would certainly consult with the Pacific Company, and an application for a suit had been made, he would have seen the same as well as was. When asked if it had not occurred to him that it was idle in the day to charge fraud against the Bell patents, witness replied that he had, some of them falling into the river. Reports from the scene of the wreck state that thirteen bodies had been recovered, but it was feared others were swept down the stream. Several persons have died of their injuries, and of the fifty or more wounded some will not survive.

WESTERN.

The grain-commission firm of Hoeksor, Crittenden & Co. of Detroit, Mich., which has branch houses in Milwaukee and Chicago, has been forced to suspend, the embarrassment being caused, it is understood, by the unprofitable speculation indulged in by one of the junior members.

Two Western railroads report the following earnings for the month of March: Chicago & Northwestern, $1,28,587, an increase over the same month last year of $2,849; Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha, $57,980, an increase of $22,800.

The labor troubles in the Southwest have had a depressing effect on the lumber trade, and mill-owners in Wisconsin are reported to be undecided in regard to setting the mill machinery in motion.

Flint and Daly, who engaged in a prize-fight in a room at St. Louis, were arrested under the State law making the crime equals and abettors guilty of felony. A prominent newspaper man held the stakes.

A fire which broke out at La Crosse, Wisconsin, in the mill of John Pettl extended to the yards of C. L. Lodinge, and thence to the sash factory, until the entire city was threatened. Assistance was sent from St. Paul, Minneapolis, Sparta and Winona. The loss is estimated at $1,99,000.

Mrs. Grindal, residding on a farm near Eau Claire, Wisconsin, gave birth to four healthy male babes.

At Charlton, Iowa, an old man named Charles Archibald was beaten to death with a soldering iron. Thomas Kelley and wife were arrested for the crime, on overwhelming evidence. In the room in Kelley's coal-shed was found $1,200, which is believed to have been the object of the murder.

After listening to a number of speeches at a meeting in front of the City Hall, a large body of East St. Louis strikers marched to the railway yards with the avowed determination of making everyone on duty quit work. Most of the engineers, firemen, and freight handlers obeyed without opposition. Sheriff Chapins, with drawn revolver, soon hooted at parties aside, and in some cases discarded. Finally a few determined men with leveled Winchesters swept the strikers, and they withdrew.

The Sunny-side Welcome arrived in Chicago the other day with clearance papers direct from Mobile, the trip having been made on the Gulf of Mexico and the Mississippi and Illinois Rivers.

The Gem City Flouring Mills at Quincy, Ill., were burned, the loss reaching $200,000. Fire also sets up was the mill stacks at Florence, Wis., causing a loss of $50,000.

SOUTHERN.

John Baxter, District Judge at Knoxville, Tennessee, died of congestive fever at Hot Springs, Ark., in his sixty-eighth year.

Before the Grand Jury at New Orleans this woman named M. Malon and Sophie made a full confession of their part in a scheme of perjury designed to secure the acquittal of the assassins of Captain Murphy, on one of a number of bonds warrants. Dr. Emmanuel E. Dreyfus was sent to the parish prison in default of $20,000 bail. Judge Thomas Ford, the chief of the band of assassins, is Consul-general of the Louisiana penitentiary, and he never has complied to wear the uniform.

The great railway strike has culminated in bloodshed at Fort Worth, Texas. A posse of deputies from the Sheriff's office were detailed to protect a train which was pulled out of the Missouri Pacific yards. They were fired upon from ambush by the strikers and one of the officers was killed, two severe-mortally wounded, and one of the strikers was hurt. It was rumored that the strikers threatened to burn the town. The Governor ordered out the State troops.

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

Mr. Gladstone's long-expected plan for home rule in Ireland is at last before the world. Amid scenes of excitement, such as have been rarely witnessed, the "grand old man" laid his measure in a crowded House of Commons on the 8th inst. Its formulation may be described in his own words: The main spring of the law in England will be in Englishmen; in Scotland to be Scotch; but in Ireland it is not felt to be Irish." This misapprehension he announces to be a Parliament in Dublin for the conduct of business both legislative and administrative. In detail, the Parliament, should the scheme be carried, will consist of two orders sitting and voting together, except when they may disagree, each order to have a veto on the legislative action of the other for a period of three years, or until dissolution. The first order is to consist of the twenty-eight representative Peers of Ireland—all Tories, by the way—should they choose to sit in the new Irish Parliament, and seventy-one members elected by ratepayers based on an assessment of $12. The second order will consist of 103 members elected on the present Irish franchise. The Parliament will be for twenty years. It will have no power to establish or impose any religious sect or interfere with the prerogatives of the Crown, or to coin money, or raise, or with the foreign or colonial policy of Great Britain. Its participation as to imports, land and customs, is to be a collecting trade and revenue, the Imperial Government retaining the Irish post office. The Irish members will continue to sit at Westminster, but their force in the Imperial Parliament will be reduced to 103. Ireland will be represented in the Imperial Parliament in proportion to her population, which is the reason why Scotland would lose 8 of her 70 representatives in the House of Commons. The committee then considered the Irish land question, and proposed a land purchase bill, on the basis of the Ashbourne act, providing for the sale of the landlord's interest in the land, the purchase money being secured by Government stock, which will be issued to the landlords, and which will be at the disposal of the Government for some time at least as a permanent security for the payment of the purchase money by the tenants. The land agent is to be permanent, but the tenants from occupiers are to be made proprietors, the tenant having the choice of from 49 years to perpetuity. The purchase money is to be advanced by the Government, which will be paid to the landlords, and the tenants will be required to repay the Government in 49 years, with interest, which will be at the rate of 4 per cent. The Government will be authorized to compel the sale of the entire property, which will enable the purchaser to get a good and marketable title. The land purchase bill will be introduced separately, and will be the first measure to be taken up by the Government in the new Parliament. It is understood that the Government will be asked to extend the Ashbourne act, which expires on the 31st of June next, so as to include the purchase of the entire property, and to provide for the payment of the purchase money by the Government. The Government will also introduce a bill for the purchase of the Irish railways, and a bill for the purchase of the Irish canals

EXPLANATION.

The Boyne City Saturday wades two-thirds of a column of space in abuse of the publisher of this paper, because unfortunate bit of sale management, which appeared in papers for Boyne City, East Jordan, and South Arm, and published on Friday, April 24, and were supplied to us over until Saturday, the 25. The whole transaction was unofficial so far as we are concerned, and any statement to the contrary is a fair specimen of the truth of the article. That portion of the Saturday's article relating to a sifted lie, the statement is 100-to-1 is a real lie; the circulation statement is false evidence of having been printed in the Saturday office—it is itself false as well as foolish. The circular in our possession can be duplicated by any one who wishes to pay for it, and a comparison of the circular with the pages of the Saturday issue will satisfy any person who can see the difference in the face of different kinds of type, by impression on paper. Our statement as to the source from which the circular emanated stands as we have repeated it since it by against all opposition.

Notes and News.

The Big Rapids Herald was the greatest kicker against fusion two years ago to be found in the ranks of either party, and the stereotyped phrase "Butler and Begole! Now is the time to kick!" has made the Herald famous. In the election last week, however, the democrats and greenbackers united and swept the board clean. Bro. Nesbitt naturally feels happy over this great victory, and we are also happy that he is no longer a "kicker," and is an earnest advocate of fusion in the state.—Independent.

One of the Inter Ocean headlines announcing election news was: "Sweeping republican victories in Michigan." Looking down the column for news, the dispatches gave accounts of uniform republican defeats from all quarters of the state. Even in the upper peninsula the regular republican tickets were routed in nearly every instance by Knights of Labor, or some other form of labor union tickets.

The Manistee Herald is out in a neat new dress, smaller type than the old, adding a large percentage to the quantity of reading matter.

The Manistique Sunday Sun has been enlarged to six columns to the page and is printed in an office of its own.

The East Jordan Enterprise was in great demand on our streets last Saturday.

Coal for Next Winter.

At a meeting of six or eight gentlemen in the parlors of a New York caucus one evening recently it was decided to limit the supply of hard coal which the American people are to have during the coming year to 35,000,000 tons, and to increase the wholesale price 25 cents per ton. It is alleged that further rise in price will be granted further on. Twenty-five cents a ton on 35,000,000 tons would amount to $8,250,000, a snug sum, and a tax which may be increased by doubling or quadrupling at any moment that the six or eight kindly gentlemen feel so disposed.

These men are the presidents of the coal roads of Pennsylvania. They are in combination and they control the anthracite mines as absolutely as though they owned them. No coal can go to market unless it passes over their roads, and no owner of a mine can operate it and live unless he accedes to their terms. As at present adjusted the capacity of the anthracite mines in Pennsylvania is about 40,000,000 tons per annum. To work long to their utmost limit would give the miners who are there employed steady work, and with an abundance of coal the people would get it cheaper and consume more of it. But the profits of the ring would be relatively smaller.

The six or eight gentlemen there are meet after dinner and limit the production. This means idleness and want for thousands of miners and their families for six months of the year that is to come, and with a limited output and a tariff which prevents importations, it means high coal to all the people—as high as the worthy six may see fit to make.

This practice is sometimes called manufacturing a scarcity. Coal is to be scarce next winter, not because it is scarce, but because the men who who control it wish it to be so. In the United States is deposited more than 70 per cent. of the coal yet found on this planet. It is naturally cheap. By just such schemes as are here outlined it has been made unnaturally high, while the men who manage it have been reduced to beggary.—Chicago Herald.

The Federal Circuit Judgeship.

The death of Judge Baxter of the sixth judicial Circuit, which is composed of the states of Michigan, Ohio, Kentucky and Tennessee, has caused considerable speculation to be indulged in as to whom the president will appoint as his successor. It was thought at first that he would select one of the many distinguished members of the Michigan bar, as this state is really entitled to the appointment. In view of this impression which so generally prevailed, the friends of commissioner of patents Montgomery have strongly urged his pre-eminent merits and fitness for the place. It is understood that he would accept the office if it were tendered to him. A federal circuit judgeship is a most honorable position, it being for life, and carrying with it a salary of $6,000. It is well known that the president entertains a very high opinion of Mr. Montgomery, but he is loth to have him leave an office in which he has proved such an efficient and zealous public servant. However, in consideration of Mr. Montgomery's superior qualifications for a judicial position, he may be induced to send his name to the senate. In that event, we can assure him that no act of his will receive more hearty endorsement from the people of Michigan. Mr. Montgomery is one of the popular favorites in this state, and the people delight to honor him.—Lansing Journal.

Since the above was in type, Senator Jackson, of Tennessee, has been appointed to fill the vacancy, and the appointment confirmed.

Additional Local.

Death of Mrs. E. H. Green.

Never in the history of Charlevoix has there been a death more touching in its family bereavement, and more fraught with more universal sorrow, than that of Mrs. E. H. Green, who quietly passed away at 9:30 yesterday morning after many months of suffering from disease of the heart, borne with remarkable grace and fortitude. The funeral will be to-morrow at the house, conducted in Rev. Mr.Ilding's absence, by Rev. C.F. VanAnken.

The maiden name of Mrs. Green was Lina A. Matthews, daughter of Hon. Rufus Matthews of Dundee, saw county, this state, who was for a long time county treasurer of his county, and at one time member of the legislature, when that body used to assemble at Lansing. Her childhood and youth were passed in the village of North field, where she was born. At the age of 18, her mother died and much of the responsibility of the family and the care of her father who at that time was a cripple, fell upon her. These duties, which some might have found irksome, were a source of constant pleasure to her, and served to train and develope her native graces, and fit her for the useful and influential life she has ever lived. At the age of 22, she went with her family to Ann Arbor; where she became a member of the M. E. church and together with her sister, took the leading parts in the choir. She could lend to times of special fervorness to the Savior; but to those who knew her best, she was a christian from the day of her birth, developing in the later years of her life, a character substantia acts of christian benevolence. She was always very quiet, unassuming, and unselfish in the highest degree. It was here in Ann Arbor that she met Mr. Green, he being a student of law, in the university. They were married, in September 1858 shortly after he took his degree; and came directly to Charlevoix, whither he had already provided the material nucleus of the pleasant home they have occupied for these 18 years, and from which has gone forth so many happy influences for the good of our village.

Only those who have passed through a similar bereavement, can appreciate the sorrow of the husband and the five children, the youngest of whom has just passed babyhood.

But the loss and sorrow is a public one as well and there is scarce a member of the church of her choice, in which she has been a most active worker during her whole residence here, at one time being almost sole and body of its choir, or of the whole christian community, that would be missed as much as she.

"Cease tears, put hands, and bear the load
Your sheaves were ripe, she died in sleep,
And some who never been in sorrow,
And feel not the mind of God-speed."

Miscellaneous Marine.

Capt. Louis Gehno commands the Van Raalt this season.

The fish tug Hahn, of Manistique, made her first lift Friday.

The tug Maxwell, from Chicago, arrived in Manistique April 8.

Manistique fishermen are getting about as restless as those of Charlevoix.

Tony Bassette of Cheboygan will wheel on the Van Raalte this summer.

A number of S. H. Davis & Co's. fish tugs arrived at Manistique during the past week.

A fog constantly hangs over Pine Lake, indicating the rapidity with which the ice is melting.

T. D. Smith, telegraphed to Chicago on Tuesday, that vessels can go up Pine Lake by next Monday.

Davis & Co's men arrived during the past week, and twice they visited their fishing grounds; but the ice prevented a lift.

The St. Ignace News put the report in print that a contract has been made with Buffalo parties for the construction of a powerful boat which is to assist the Algonsah in keeping the straits open in the winter season. She is to have a wheel fore and aft, and will be built the coming summer, ready for service next winter.

A dispatch from Bay City says that vessel owners engaged in the lumber-carrying trade have agreed to not load boats until May 1, and will thus shorten the carrying season, and, it is hoped, maintain rates. Owners from Detroit, Alpena, Port Huron, and St. Clair will be asked to join the scheme.—Manistique Sun.

The Harbor Point dock is badly damaged by the ice, and the shore end of the structure resembles a cripple's back. The outer crib is not damaged however, and a few days work with a pile driver will put the dock in good shape again. We understand the Harbor Point association rent the dock of Mr. Allen, of Charlevoix, and if so the boys will fall in line.—Harbor Springs Independent.

The steamer Atlantic, of the Grummond line, which was advertised last week to sail for Alpena and other Lake Huron ports, reached Saginaw Bay, and there encountered such heavy fields of ice that she was compelled to return to Sand Beach, or tying down on the 24. Navigation is partially open on the Detroit and St. Clair rivers. Steamers between Detroit and Cleveland are running on regular time, as they are likewise doing on the upper end of Lake Michigan. The ice in the straits and St. Mary's river shows but little weakening.—Chippewa Democrat.

Mr. Joseph Pappin, is putting up a blacksmith shop back of Burns & Scroggie's livery stable. He has a good location, down next to the bench, and is making a good sized shop—20x24, with a wagon shop above, which he will keep constantly occupied by a good workman. He will be ready for business in a few days.

Rev. VanAnken gave a splendid sermon to the firemen last Sunday evening. The house was crowded, and besides the words of hearty appreciation which we have heard from the sailors during the week, we can but think that when the waves run high, some of the truths they then heard will return to them for their good.

"The mills of the gods grind slowly, but grind exceeding small." The JOURNAL's account of the murder of Peter Higgins was noticed in the New York World; whereupon a subscriber wrote the JOURNAL a letter of inquiry concerning Mr. Higgins. We have investigated the matter and now have conclusive evidence that some 15 years ago he lived in Cooperville, Clinton Co., New York, with a true and faithful wife whom he shortly afterwards murdered in order to marry a more fascinating French-Canadian girl, the same who assisted in the horrible Antrim Co. tragedy of last winter. The whereabouts of the runaway pair was unknown until the item above referred to was read in the World. Justice was slow in coming, but came at last.

The Boys' Band are making arrangements to give open air concerts once a week or oftener, as soon as the weather softens so that our people can get out to enjoy them. When they get well started in this extra work, they would make a fine appearance on our streets arrayed in bright new uniforms, and our citizens can show their appreciation of the music in no better way than in helping the boys to get their uniforms.

The term of school taught by Miss Gladys Jefferies, in what is known as the Hayward district closed on Friday, April 9th, with an exhibition, in which nearly all the scholars took part, which elicited great praise from a crowded house of spectators. The tableaux were especially impressive and meritorious. The following pupils were neither absent nor tardy for the term. Johnnie Strathers, Charlie Strathers, Lennie Cooper, Nora Cooper, Lucy Strathers, was neither absent nor tardy for the last month of the term.

The Gough memorial service, held by the ladies of the W. C. T. U. in the M. E. church on Sunday afternoon, was very instructive, and cannot fail to command reverence and respect for the man who learned by so hard an experience how to say "No," for the honor of his God, and for his own good; and who in gratitude for his own rescue, gave himself so naturally to the rescue of humanity from the greatest curse of any and all lands. Rev. Clark's remarks were right to the point, and heartily appreciated by all. We may not all be Goughs, but we may be Strationes.

Boats and Boatmen of Charlevoix.

During the winter, Washburn & Ackert have been furnished with considerable repairing upon the engines of various tugs that have wintered in Charlevoix, and this spring, as soon as the snow began to subside and the atmosphere warmed up sufficient for out-door labor, the sound of the carpenter's hammer has been heard on all sides of Round lake, getting the various crafts ready for business.

The Gazelle is ready for the season's passenger traffic between Charlevoix and East Jordan. She will leave here at 7 and 2, returning at 11:30 and 6. She will be managed by Capt. Mason.

The Clara Belle is taking a new timber head and new paint, and is re-calked, and ready for the passenger trade between here and Boyne City. Her time is the same as the Gazelle.

Besides the passenger boats of Charlevoix, Capt. Vanderhoef, of Grand Haven, will run the Friant between Harbor Springs and East Jordan on her last year's time. Report comes that she is ready and waiting for the ice to move. The captain has also purchased another boat of about the capacity of the Friant, which will run on the same line, only in the opposite direction. Hannah, Lay, & Co's steamers, City of Grand Rapids, and T. S. Faxton, will each make three trips a week between Traverse City and Cheboygan. The former, under Capt. Wilber, will be in Charlevoix on her north bound trip, Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, at 11:30 a. m., returning Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday at 4:30. The latter, under Capt. Aldrich, will make her north trips Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, being in Charlevoix at 12 m., and returning Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, at 4 p. m.

The schooner Mackinaw, has had more repairs than any other craft here. Every timber of plant weakened by wear or exposure has been replaced by new, and she is recalked, and takes a new coat of paint. Being the property of Upright & Emrey, her first business will be to relieve their dock of the immense pile of ties and posts they bought this winter. She will have an efficient crew and Capt. Madison at the head.

The schooner Hercules was bought last week of Amos Fox by Capt. Dan Way, who will do a general freight-ing business with her this summer. She required very little repairing.

The schooner Lottie Mason, now owned by Morehouse & Sutton (Mr. Morehouse having purchased Dan Way's interest) required few repairs, and is partly loaded with wood. She will do a general freighting business with Capt. Morehouse at her head.

The schooner Clara is taking quite an overhauling under the supervision of her owner, Capt. Hoag, who will make his first trip to Milwaukee with potatoes, as soon as the ice is out of Pine Lake.

The schooner F. M. Smith takes a few repairs in her timbers, and a new coat of paint. She will run between here and Milwaukee, Capt. Tullock in command.

The schooner Fleetwing has had her quarter deck cut down, and a few other changes and repairs, besides a coat of paint. Capt. Wilson, an "old salt," who has navigated the Atlantic and Indian oceans, but who for the past decade has run on these inland seas, will command her. She is not yet chartered for her first voyage, but will do a general freighting business.

The little schooner Velocipede is also owned by Capt. Wilson. She will do a coast freighting business, and is only waiting for the ice to clear away.

The schooner Union owned by Capt. Frederick Voight, has lain here all winter and is taking some repairs here; but as soon as navigation opens will return to the wood and lumbering trade on the Georgian Bay.

The schooner Sea Gem, owned by T. D. Smith, will be captained by Oscar Smith, and will trade in ties, posts, and wood. With new paint and other repairs she will go out in first class order.

The tug Col. L. S. Payne is taking a new foredeck, and paint, and with the Fairchild tugs, will go into a general towing service. Eli Tenhouse, captain, and Tom Nowland, engineer.

The tug Martin will do a general towing business, with genial Capt. Stephens at the head. She has had a complete overhauling, and begins the season in splendid shape.

The J. L. Higgin, owned by Capt. Roberts, who arrived last Friday, and has been busy ever since, has this week been looking to the necessities of his boat, will keep the Pine Lake Lumber Co's mill supplied with logs and the balance of the time do a general towing business.

The tug Minnie Warren is taking a new foredeck, deck beams, and new deck forward. With Capt. Dan McNeil in command, she will do a general towing service.

The tug Wayne Isbell looks as bright as new with her new paint. She keeps up steam constantly, and made several unsuccessful attempts to break through the ice. She belongs to Mr. Isbell, of Detroit, who does an extensive fishing business near the Beavers. She is mastered by Chas. Purdy.

The Geo. F. Fisher is another of Mr. Isbell's tugs that laid up in Charlevoix. She is in charge of Capt. Joe Ferguson.

The tug Aneqush was one of the first to be ready for business this spring. She too has had a hand in ice breaking, but to no avail. Capt. Gerkens, her owner, will follow fishing the same as last year. He has 45 cords of ice put up, and will run 600 pounds of twine in 400 nets, employing six hands.

But the fishing business is not entirely, nor even mostly carried on by tugs. Pat O'Neil with a little skiff has made three lifts already, getting a fine lot each time. He runs 600 pounds of twine in 200 nets. When the ice is gone he will make trips with a sail boat.

John O'Neil is operating on about the same scale as his brother Pat.

Bedford and Sowles run 200 nets, and every convenience for a good business in fresh fish.

Gives & Son do a fair business in netting and other small fish.

Besides these crafts and crews so directly connected with Charlevoix, it is impossible to give any definite account of the numerous vessels from other parts which take part in our trade and travel.

Twenty-five thousand dollars per annum is a moderate estimate for the amount brought into our society from fisheries alone.

OUR SPECIAL PRICES STILL CONTINUE.

THE SONG OF DON MERAGOO.

BY ELSIE NORTON.

Should you ask me whence this story,
Whence this legend so strange and weird,
I should answer, I should tell you,—
"From the far, far Western country,
Near the wide, wide Western ocean,
From the mountains, moors, and fountains
Of the powerful, calm Pacific."
Of the land of tried and true,
Of the land of romance and song,
Of the land of gold and honor,
Dwelt an ancient, high-born maiden—
Loved the opulent, Don Meragoo,
In the land of gold and wonder,
In the land of romance and song.
With his death the only daughter,
Was ward was this maiden fair,
Left her mode of life and solitude,
Eyes that smiled and frowned alternate,
Feet so fairy as the river,
Left to mourn at his neglect.
Loved but she, proud and imperious,
Tall of frame and fair of feature,
And she gave him back a woeful,
Sweetly stolled upon them all;
But at last there came a suitor
Hence and rich, of high degree,
Dark of face, with black, black eyes,
Jet of hair, even like the raven,
Sun-lit—oddly curling hair;
Came to lend the low-toned music
Of her twilight guitar,
Of his name and long he tarried,
Long he with all his wealth,
In the evening, and at night,
Tall of frame and fair of feature,
Dwelling was then with a Frank,
Frowning did he look upon him,
Spoke of him to his daughter,
Then he lighted in her eyes,
And he vowed in anger,
Talked of war, and Gonzalez,
Knowing "Gonzalez" and "Gonzalez"
He would fulfill—he was a chief
With his long Toledo blade,
Knowing "Gonzalez" and "Gonzalez",
Like the rolling of a drum,
Then a challenge he did send him,
Challenge long to fight at dawn,
Hence fight a short duel—and,
At the week's end, when
In the hamlet of the swan
Dwelt the Don Meragoo,
Dwelt the Don Meragoo,
Dwelt the Don Meragoo,

Around the County.

Ironton.

A good audience listened to a fine discourse by Rev. G. F. VanAuken, at the church, Sunday afternoon.

The Congregational Sunday school held its second session with an increase in the attendence and a grand corps of teachers.

We notice an advertisement for bids on the new Congregational church. The committee in charge seem to push the work and hope to see the building completed by July.

The G. A. R. building is nearing completion, and promises to be very inviting, both inside and out. We wish them success in their efforts.

The falling of a kiln caused quite a flurry Sunday morning, as it was full of wood and had been fired a day or more. For a time it seemed as if the wood was likely to burn and the result would have been quite disastrous, as the trim and several thousand cords of wood were near. The company feel under obligations to the men who so faithfully worked. Had they been owners of the property, they could not have done more to save it.

The wood chopping goes on briskly, hundreds of cords being contracted for every day.

An infant child, of John Barr was buried April 10th.

E. L. Burdick lately killed a wild cat, which has been frequenting the wood yard. The cat showed fight but Burdick heroically hit it with a stick of cord wood. As a killer of wild cats, he has few equals.

Hello East Jordan! where's that oyster supper? Aren't you going to evidence your gratitude for that overwhelming majority? If we can't have a bridge, we ought to have an oyster supper at your expense, at the Lake View House, Ironton. Please say when?

Burgess.

John Simonton is getting things in readiness to raise his house, this week.

Chas. Howe's little boy is quite sick.

The sleighing is all gone, and the ground is rapidly settling and farmers can soon commence their plowing.

The township board met last Friday, and appointed J. A. Bacot as health officer, and Oscar Tibbetson and Isaac Webster, as board of review.

The season thus far has been favorable for making maple sugar.

The exhibition at the Hoyland school house, last Friday evening, was pronounced by those who were present, to be a decided success. Great praise was accorded to the teacher Miss Jefferies for the admirable way the whole performance was conducted. This is her third term in the same school.

Spring has arrived.

Preaching Sunday at two o'clock by Rev. G. W. Howe.

It is to be hoped that the school "storm" will soon be over.

Mr. David Francis and daughter Edith returned from Canada Friday, where they have been visiting friends for the past few weeks.

Ellsworth.

The men have just finished drawing logs to the mill, as the roads are quite bare in places.

Those, who are engaged in making maple sugar, are taking advantage of this pleasant weather and are very busy.

There was a good attendance at Mr. Gordan's dance last Friday night, and the revelers did maple justice to an oyster supper provided for them.

We learn that Orlando Burbank of South Arm, the young man who furnished the music for the dance last week, died suddenly Sunday night and was buried Tuesday.

HUMSELLERS.

BY C. B. DOUGO.

Hit them again for me, Mr. Hinde,
Give it to them hardie, be not disinated,
Good men and true men all the world over
Sow and spread, give the devil seven more

Strike from the shoulder, make every blow tell;
Their armor is clean, their weapons as well.
You fight in the cause of right against the Rum;
And victory must crown your valor e're long.

I've an unsettled score against these kind of men;
They made me an orphan before I was ten,
Sent my father a week to an untimely grave,
A mother reduced to a mud-house to rave.

Shrouded all my young life with the scars that are seared
On the quivering head of the poor drunkard's child.

Then no wonder that I rejoice at the view
Of the avenger's strong arm giving dessums their due.

Let liquid men shun them, as virtue shuns vice
Let youth pass them by, as truth would the thief
Their doom is approaching, there's no one to shield
Save in their friend, who is likewise their slave.

Prohibition Coming.

Prohibition is an aggressive work. We cannot profess to be interested in the destruction of the liquor traffic and stand still. Each thought and impulse is continuously onward to its final culmination. It is only necessary that we commence to wish and desire to see this evil crushed to awaken the conviction that prohibition is possible, and a sight examination into the methods of political prohibition, and the conviction will soon become apparent that this is the remedy and the only remedy, and to the mind and heart that seeks for the best weapons and the most effective means to demolish the rum power, political prohibition will be welcomed and cherished as the best and only practical remedy, and our efforts and aspirations will not be satisfied until we attain a full development of the problem. The annihilation of the withering, blighting, blasting curse of the liquor traffic, through prohibition by the easiest, quickest and best manner possible.—Demorest's Magazine.

Six Questions.

Have you a son?
Do you know that he will not become a drunkard if the sale of liquor is licensed?
Have you a daughter?
Are you sure she will not become a drunkard's wife?
Do you know if you don't drink liquor will never harm you, if it is sold to other men to drink?
Are you sure that the party with which you vote will give you the protection against the liquor traffic that you desire?

Notes and News.

The Petoskey Democrat commenced its twelfth year with the issue for last week. Mr. J. G. Hill, as editor, is keeping the paper up in good shape while the syndicate of owners are casting about for a good man to come and take the business off their hands. It is an excellent opening for a good live democrat.

"When capital organizes, there is no outcry; when men organize for legislation or corruption, there is no outcry; but when workingmen organize, men wonder what it is all coming to."—H. W. Beecher.

The Manistee Advocate and the Manistee Printing Co. have combined their forces, and now claim to have the "largest, newest, and choicest line of job type north of Detroit." Their outfit of presses and engines is also complete.

The name of I. M. Weston, of Grand Rapids, has been put forward for governor on the democratic ticket.

C. J. Pailthorp has been re-elected village attorney for Petoskey for the ensuing year.

Letters are Sacred.

WASHINGTON, April 15.—An interesting story comes to the postoffice department from North Platte, Neb. One of four accessories to a murder near that place a year ago has turned state's evidence. Two of his accomplices have been arrested, but the fourth, Eugene Myers, is still at liberty. The postmaster at North Platte has been requested by the sheriff and the foreman of the grand jury to detain all letters passing through the office to and from Myers' family, believing that Eugene's wife knows where he is, and is writing to him. They desire to open the letters and after reading them send them to their destination. He asks the department whether he is authorized to do this. The department calls attention to the ruling of the department that under no pretext are letters to be opened. Neither postmasters, inspectors, employes or officers of the law can do so under any circumstances, but they must be delivered as addressed. Some other means, they say, must be devised to ascertain Myers' whereabouts.

A Prohibition Straw.

In Otsego the democrats and republicans fused to beat the prohibitionists. The prohibitionists came out elected.

A Japanese Scene.

About midway in the feast three girls of sweet and serious countenance came in with their musical instruments and played to as divertingly. After one instrumental piece the panels slipped aside and three geishas, or dancing girls, came gliding upon the scene, arrayed in exquisite kimonos, or dresses of pale blue silk, bezeobed with drooping branches of crimson and gold maple leaves. Their broad sashes, or obis, confining the folds of the loose dresses at the waist, were the most gorgeous of the rich old gold brocades; folds of contrasting crape were laid in the pointed neck of their kimonos, and the glossy blue-black hair was dressed in elaborate puffs and loops, held by twists of bright crape and thrust full of silver hairpins. They carried fans of gilt paper painted with maple leaves, and to the music of the samisen, and the plaintive voices of the musicians chanting the song of the "Maple Leaf," these lovely creatures danced out that poem. The dancing was all gliding and posing to the slow measures of the song. The little white-stockinged feet slipping over the polished matting and showing in glimpses at the bottom of the long kimonos, the bodies thrown in graceful poses, and the play of the pretty fans were each studies in themselves. The slow and graceful evolutions, the elegant play of foot and fan, and the exquisite beauty and picturesqueness of the faces and figures were most enchanting, and it was hard to realize that I was not dreaming this gallery of living Japanese pictures moved before me. It was the realization of all that fancy paints for one who builds up an ideal Japan from the fine decorations of its art works, and instead of disappointing in any particular the three lovely geishas, in their maple-leaf dresses, surpassed all dreams. The second time the geishas came in they were arrayed in kimonos of dark sea-blue crape shot with maple leaves, and their obis were of gold brocade. In these exquisite costumes, with many poses and gestures they danced for us their song of the four seasons, the maple-leaf fans fluttering daily to the floor as the slender little figures crouched and shivered in the cold winds of autumn. Another dance represented the rainy day, the three pretty creatures clad in plaid dark-blue kimonos and carrying paper umbrellas, as they posed and glided to the twanging of the Oriental lute. The best dance was in solo by one geisha, arrayed in a dark, mysterious kimono, with a piece of crape wound about her neck, who sang with the musicians, and in long recitatives told of the woes of the heroine of a sadly pathetic tale from the Japanese classics.—Detroit Cor. St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Senator Palmer, of Detroit, Mich., has been prowling about the old homestead at Ashford, Conn., where he was born, and has shipped thence a large number of old household relics, with which he will fill a log cabin which he has built on his grounds at home. The astonished rural expressions told the sender that "the hull lot ain't worth the express cost, stranger." Small trees of every available kind on the old place are to be taken up and transplanted about the log cabin, also huckleberry and blackberry bushes; and, to complete the imitation New England which he proposes to lay out around his Michigan cabin, the millionaire Senator even thinks of shipping a carload of genuine New England rocks from the old farm to the smooth and stoneless West.

Probably the most fortunate men identified with the turf have been the Dwyer brothers, of New York. In 1876 they started by winning $17,000. Since then their winnings have been enormous. During the year 1880 their winnings amounted to $77,367. In 1881 $84,146 was placed on the right side of their ledger. The year following they won $74,360, and in 1883 they surpassed all records by winning a clear total of $138,950. Their luck was not so good in 1884, as only $60,000 was credited to them. This year their winnings will pass the $100,000 mark, and, having grown wealthy off their fast steeds, they intend to withdraw from the track.

Here are a couple of anecdotes of the late Emery A. Storrs which appear in the New York Tribune: "We are told of a remark made by Storrs after an incident of Lord Coleridge's visit to this country. Storrs gave him a supper at Chicago. A toast to whom Storrs owed an account attached the supper at the hotel where it was laid just before it was to be served. Storrs appealed to the friends who had been invited to the dinner, and the money was promptly raised. As he paid the bill he said, 'This is the first time in the history of the world that a Lord's supper has been attached for debt.' Mr. Chauncey said that Storrs, who was at one time a hard drinker, said to him: 'Chauncey, I never came to New York and start down Broadway, even in cold weather, without getting on the shady side of the street. 'Why, what is that for?' asked Chauncey, whose Storrs responded: 'This town is confoundedly demoralizing, and I daren't walk in the sun for fear my shadow will ask me to go drink.'"

Killed by Strikes.

Thirty four years ago a number of prominent Detroit capitalists organized the Detroit Locomotive Works and erected the building on Atwater street, between Congress and Larned. The enterprise had paid in was a quarter of a million dollars. The shop began with about 130 men, but has at times employed nearly 500 at once. It was the first shop in Detroit to abolish the piece-pay system and pay every man's wages in hard cash. It was one of the first to advance wages when the war increased prices. Up to last June the works had paid out to the mechanics of Detroit over $2,000,000 in cash. For the first twelve years the stock holders steadily sunk money, but not once in that time were the wages of the men cut down. On the contrary there were three or four strikes which increased wages and made new assessments upon stockholders a necessity.

From 1862 to 1872 the works could do have made money. They were paying men $2 to $5.50 per day, and paying cash, and had assisted scores of them to buy homes. In 1864 a contract was taken for more in an $200,000 worth of work for New York parties. Wages were then at the highest notch, and in taking the contract all figuring was done on the prevailing basis. The work had scarcely enter ed the shop before there was a strike, and in the space of sixteen months the men struck eleven times. With each strike wages were advanced, until common mechanics were getting their $4.50 and $5 per day. The result was that the works lost $157,000 in clear cash.

In all the thirty four years not a single stockholder has made enough money to buy him a pair of boots. On the contrary his deal has his been fully twenty per cent of what he put in. There have been in all over twenty strikes, and last June, realizing that the great shop could only be run at a loss as long as strikers now are, it was decided to shut them down. There was still a kindly feeling towards the men, and when they proposed to take the shop and run it they were given the chance. It was decided that they should have the use of shops and tools, pay neither taxes nor insurance, and in case they made anything the profits should be divided. The shop is still being run in that way, but with the result that men who earned $3 and $4 per day with no company to control, now receive $1.25 to $2.50. The profits have not been half enough to pay the taxes, paying nothing of repairs and other incidentals. There has been sunk money, the shop was established at least half a million of dollars of capital, saying nothing of the money received for work, and some of the officers and yesterday that it was not at all likely the plant would ever be opened again. The stockholders would have been satisfied to keep their money in stock in Mr. Shrier for a new kiln on his lot near his cottage. Mr. Shrier is also putting new brick in the wall of the Chicago Clothing House.

Harry Chamberlin came over from Charlevoix on Saturday. We understand that he contemplates the purchase of a meat market in Charlevoix to start in business on his own account.—Petoskey Record.

John Mason has his new house, on the terrace across from Washburn & Ackert's, nearly enclosed. He has the fine situation, and from the frame of his building, it will correspond with the location.

On Dixon avenue, Mrs. Pope is having the siding put on her house that was begun last fall. Mr. Philip Howe, has added a bay window, and veranda, and Geo. Pappin is building a kitchen on the rear of his house.

Upright & Emrey have decided to enlarge their dock, making it 220 feet long and some 40 or 50 feet further into the lake. It will then be the most commodious dock in Charlevoix. They will put a large warehouse upon one side, and prepare themselves in every way for their fast increase in business. The work was begun by L. E. Allen's pile-driver yesterday.

Upright avenue has two new houses under way. One is the property of Mr. Chas. Cook,—a nice cozy little residence which he will be able to move into soon. The other is owned by Mr. Bartlett, who has not begun the work of building, but has the lumber on the ground. Mr. Shrier, on this same street, is putting a wing on his house for a kitchen, bedroom, and pantry.

First Vice President—Mrs. C. T. Cook.
Second Vice President—Mrs. A. E. Smith.
Third Vice President—Mrs. H. Cook.

Treasurer—Mrs. C. Jones.

At the 12th annual session of the W. C. T. U. held in Philadelphia, a short time since, Mrs. Hannah Smith said Smith delivered a rousing address on "wings," from which we make the following clippings:

Difference of opinion is no sin, but the moment we allow that difference of opinion to come and force its self life then we perceive it. I want these wings so strength just then we shall all go off as a flock when nothing come up like a mon turn in our way. We think so settings we should not be misunderstood. We may perhaps stand me and I shall misunderstand you. Pr haps you will have meant something I did not, but if our hearts are right towards each other, and we think we are serving Him, there need be no misunderstanding. We must follow the Lord Jesus. He says "Ye servants is not above his Master, and the disciple above his Lord." If they have called the Master of the house Beelzebub, how much more shall they call them of his household. Not when they call us Beelzebub, shall we do? We shall be glad of it, he says so. He says in the 6th chapter of Luke: "Rejoice and leap for joy." Now, dear friends, reverse the way you are taking things, if people speak against you, rejoice and leap for joy. I think I take my position for Christ's sake, my sister thinks for sensitiveness; it is nothing but selfishness. Self is so near the surface that it gets hurt. You remember that verse, "He that takes in a prophet from the strife of tongues." Fortunately we have not eyes in the back of our head and see him one way. If you see one way and I an other, determined that there shall be no strife, as far as you are concerned. When we are rewiled let us bless, and we shall find our differences of opinion to be wings that will bearry triumphant over. "Can my enemeth be good? I ask, charity cometh not as its vanineth not itself, is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil." Oh, let these words be true of us. Don't think evil of any one, don't attribute motives to any one.

It makes a difference we do or you are looking down from above or whether you are looking from the same level. I imagine when we dies get above, we shall look down and say, "Ah, ah, why did I err. It was not worth while." And we could look upon these things as a blessing for our uplifting. If we had nothing but plain sailing, we would not know how to get on. We women of the W. C. T. U. do profess before the world to be conservatives women, that is we are still conservative. Whether it is true of every individual I do not know, but we all consider ourselves that, and we want to be considered that. Now, conservative women, conservative women who have given themselves to God to be, to do, and to suffer His will. To be, to do, and to suffer His will.

I want to repeat that every heart that believes in the Lord Jesus Christ, the salvation He has provided, can have this victory. We will apply it to-day. Here we are, sanctify it for Christ's sake, and we will do it. We think right and act in a way we do not think right. Let us every time that happens bless that person, pray for that person, love that person, put our mantle of charity over that person, excuse that person, and get in her shoes, look out of that person's eyes. If we will do that we will not only get wings, but as individuals we will get a new glorious victory. Oh, dear friends, I want that we should be women with wings and not women but grope and waddle along the earth. We have flown over many things, but I want that we should fly over each other. If a sister seems to stand in our way, don't knock her down, or go around her, but fly over her by blessing her; no matter what it is, fly over her. Let us make up our minds to this. Let us get our rhinoceros skins on. We have cause enough, we are the oppressed half of humanity, and we have a great deal to suffer and arouse our indignation and a great deal to stir us up. I never will believe that the reason women are better than men is because we have had to put on this rhinoceros skin, so I thank our dear brothers.

DINNER SERVICE.

Some Hints as to the Solution of This Important Question.

A writer in Good Housekeeping says the solution of the dinner service question is to model that for a lifetime, which no one is pressed but the being worthy, the model of what it should be when surrounded by guests. Buy a piece of linen Damask made under your inspection. Have enough to reach upon on the well side of the room and a piece of thread in its holes, the back on the right hand, and to put the linen, with the sharp edge turned from the one who is to sit, it, to avoid the unsightliness. At the point of the seat the needle and individual butter plate. Mats, tablespoons, salt-sellers, and pepp-rcontainers to be arranged to suit one's own taste. Rapid the heavy china from the center of the table, and put them instead a vase of flowers, if it be heating more ambitious that some silver, or of evergreen, single or in a spray of interspersed. At the corners place upright a white napkin, the point towards the middle of the table, to protect the cloth from splashes of gravy. Let the soup be served by the waiters, and cake with an accompanion of except a piece of dry bread to eat the soup. Butterine is only less vulgar than thickening the contents of the plate with crumbs. When one course has been removed the meat and vegetables may be placed on the table. If there is wood it should be served separately, as a course by itself.

The lovely part of the dinner eaten, the meal should be summoned, and should commence the clearing of the table by carrying out first the meat, then the dishes of vegetables, and after the plates and force-pumps, placing one on top of the other, and using a tray to transfer everything except the silver plates. Do not permit her to go through the operation of scraping the contents of one plate into another, with a contact of knives and forks, and then bearing off the whole pile at once. Two plates at a time are enough for one hand. Near after the soiled dishes have been all mats, salt-cellars and other table-furniture but tumblers, waterpitcher or pitcher, napkin-rings and necktoons, and then have the crumb brush and tray used.

Dessert is then served, and, except at a ceremonious dinner, the cut coffee, which should never appear early in the action, and the work of waiting is done. When one realizes the exceeding simplicity of this much dreaded branch of domestic service it seems incomprehensible that so many families dinny waiting should be unknown. I am well aware that the question of serving is generally the sticking point. It is very hard—sometimes impossible—for the mistress with but one maid of all work to demand that that one shall be a practiced waitress. It is much easier to have the food jumbled on the table in a helter-skelter manner than to run the risk of making trouble by insisting that himself be served in courses. But the matter is not so difficult, after all, if the servant understands from the beginning that this will be required of her.

No scamer is the front out of the ground, and pleasant days returned than building of various and all descriptions begins in almost every part of town.

Miscellaneous Marine.

The water is 10 ft. deep in the streets of Montreal, and the city is in dark mess.

The Mockingbird was the first vessel out by one day. She cleared Monday.

The Friant left Frankfort for this port yesterday, and arrived here as we go to press.

Two of Davis & Co.'s fish tugs, the Kayling and the Fisherman arrived Sunday afternoon.

The familiar music of the Sea Wing was heard for the first time this season on Tuesday.

The Algomah was greeted by a satisfied crowd on Friday after her first trip of the season.

The schooners Mockingbird and Hercules loaded with ties at Upright & Emrey's last Saturday.

P. S. Brown went Monday to take his place as engineer of the Morley, now lying at Traverse City.

Capt. Wilber left Leland Monday, to superintend the refitting of the steamer City of Grand Rapids.

The Champlain reached Harbor Springs and Cross Village with but little interference from the ice.

A company has been formed to put in a canal 50 feet wide and 8 feet deep to utilize the water power of the St. Mary's river. The estimated expense is $500,000.

The first boat in this season was the Evening Star of Sieboygan, which was towed in this port Sunday morning by the tug Martin. She came light, and is now loading at Dwight's landing, with wood and ties for Milwaukee.

The job of swinging the bridge was again given to James Martin, this time at $1 per day of 24 hours, for seven days in the week. This is a little more humane than 70 cents a day for a hard year for the same labor; but with nobody at fault, it is a little too low yet.

The oil painting in Geo. Miller's window, representing the entrance of steamer City of Grand Rapids into Harbor of Charlevoix, receives praise from all who see it. It is the work of Mr. F. Lahow, and we predict for him a round sum for it when the resorters come.

The Martin seems to be taking the cedar business, she brought the first boat in and took the first out. She accompanied the Mockingbird some 16 miles, on Monday, and the crew composed of the Hercules, Lotties, Mason and Florence M. Smith, 11 miles. We can testify that the captain is an accommodating man, and keeps a crew "after his own heart," and deserves a rich patronage this summer.

On the night of the 1st the steam barge Burlington, on route to Cleveland with the barges Star of Hope and Vanoetta in tow, were struck by a gale when off Point Pelee. They anchored one and tried to hold on to the other, but both were driven on shore and completely wrecked. They will prove a total loss. The crews had a narrow escape, but all were saved. One man lost the fingers of one hand.—Manistique Pioneer.

John V. Tuttle, inspector, says that the propeller Lawrence, of the Northern Michigan line, has just completed the most thorough refitting that he has ever seen on a "consul" propeller or vessel. Death of Mrs. Lamphear.

Mrs. B. W. Lamphear died last Sunday afternoon, after several week's illness with various forers, the latter of which was typhoid.

Mr. and Mrs. Lamphere, (nee, Katie Kepes,) were married last October, and the blow fell exceedingly heavy upon the young husband, and indeed upon the whole family, of which she was the pel. The funeral occurred on Tuesday, at the M. E. church, Rev. VanAuken officiating.

The bereaved family desired the Journal to express their gratitude for the assistance and sympathy offered in their hour of affliction.

Broke His Leg.

Richard Cooper began Monday the work of putting a new wall under the Fountain City House. The party who was hauling the stone having a fractious team, Mr. Cooper undertook to help him unload. After the stones were thrown off, in climbing down, the boards flipped up and he fell, breaking his right leg just above the ankle. The wound was dressed, and he is now doing well; although he got no sleep for two days, and suffered an agony of pain. The confinement at this season of the year is as hard to bear as the pain itself.

Notice.

The school board desire to call the attention of the parents of school children within the district to the following rule which was adopted Nov. 14th, 1880, by the board.

Sec. 1. No pupil shall be admitted to any department of the school under five years of age. Pupils are required to commence attendance promptly at the beginning of each term, to be regular and punctual, to conform to the regulations, and to yield prompt obedience to all directions of teachers.

It is found necessary to enforce particularly that portion of the rule which is in italics above, owing to the crowded condition of the school, but more particularly the lowest primary department, which has 80 scholars as regular attendants.

By order of school board.

MOTHER'S MENDING BASKET.

BY ANNIE ROSSER.

Over and under, and in and out,
"This will little benefit do,
Patching and darning and stitches and stitches
Thousands and hundreds do!
Are the patches in and, though weary,
Work I must on and on
Ah! I wish that never are finished;
For something is never done.

He takes up the fallow's shocking,
And with it fallow it load,
And wheeling the manure with a tender touch,
Thinks it must be explosive fuel.
As he thinks of her pretty girlhood
Of her ripe and rosy prime
And she stows the first pair of stockings
He had as long ago.

Then she speaks to the little maiden
Sorrowing heart and bare
And to her about these stockings
Of the little boy who wears
"I feel for a hard time on my dear
Don't be discouraged, but try,
And after awhile you'll mean to knit
As what and even as I."

She kisses on a little blue cotton,
And thinks of the wistful face
Of her darling's loss discovering
"It summer. I'm here yet here."
Maybe another that shall's pet apron
Three beds up a tiny shoe,
And before the little thing was broken,
And not the ribbon of blue.

The mend is as the wounded of warring
Unknown as up to her pain
"I wish to the Lord I'm working
Will the closed the spirit on
Of the little one who is waiting
Will I have a young child at rest
And let its silence on the battered shadow
Of the face of this nest and
"O where will the little bed sunshine
Before the morning dawn
Where the little hands be polished
When the mother's heart is torn
Is under the spring blue chalice
And under the summer grass
When over fell the sunshine justice
And the shadow of winter pass?"

And a prayer from her heart also affirm:
"God bless them, on our mar all!
O, it now be many, many years
Longsome, Lord, before
To her work from the morning vanished
Her home will be a home without
Make bless, Lord, to be, and children
She is also the first and best.

THE WIDOW DURRELL'S MATRIMONIAL PLANS.

BY MISS H. MARIA GEORGE.

"I'm sure, Carrie, I don't know what better you could do," said the Widow Durrell, with a sigh, as she stood in the "smoke-house," or summer kitchen, one May morning, with her sleeves rolled up, dough-pan, semi-weekly churning "and look a good meal's enough for my girls to know."

"But, mother," said Carrie, throwing her sun-bonnet in a chair and proceeding to wash the grease off her dimpled elbows, "how can I do better? Ma's relations are? He may not want to marry at all."

"There, there! like you, Cad Durrell," groaned the widow. "Not know what his relations are, and he's been coming here off and on these six months. Of course, Tom is a cousin to many. He's got a large farm, and ain't that kind of a fellow to fool round as some I have known."

"But may be, mother, that, supposing Tom Stapleton don't care anything about me, but does care for somebody else."

Mrs. Durrell stopped kneading the golden mass of butter, and looked her young daughter keenly in the face. All of the widow's spirit and three-score years were allowed to be comely maidens, but Carrie was decidedly the flower of the flock in that respect, notwithstanding Byron's description of Dudu.

"Tears, I suppose, and fear."

"And of a beauty that would drive you crazy."

She was full and plump of form, with a velvet-complexioned face, soft, dusky blue eyes, a tipped up, wicked little chin, lips just made to be kissed, and a wealth of lipy hair with sunlight shining in every fold and ripple. "Languid and lazy" she undoubtedly was—an vulgar haste about her. Her brisk, energetic mother had been heard more than once to wish that a wasp would sting Carrie into life, or that she could go around any faster. A wasp never did sting Carrie, and she never did go around any faster.

"You should be care for it, if I tell you. I'd like to know, Cad Durrell?" expostulated the widow, a fine a stump planter. "If you wasn't so mortally slow you might have been settled before this time, some one Phoebe and Sophy Ann. And he you'll grow gray-headed. A ripple of silvery laughter roused from the sweet red lips, and the bronzed head was tossed about in pretty scorn.

"Why, mother Durrell, you certainly don't wish me to marry a man who doesn't want me! I think it's in that Tom's effect only he doesn't dare speak out.

"An sham! sham, I'll be bound—if it her mother, lately. "You know that all aunts! I'm ashamed for her to be Squire Rayner's wife. She isn't strong enough to do the drudgery of a family."

"But aren't we family, you've always said that," said Carrie, with a peculiar smile.

"Yes, she's family, which you know," declared the widow, emphatically. "Bread never burns and her pastry—sakes alive! I'm sorry. You never did have had about such things."

Of all human afflictions, a daughter who seemed to be counted without the bonn of "family" was the severest to a driving New England housewife like Mrs. Polly Durrell.

"I, sakes, gypsy-looking girl, with great dark eyes like sloes, and wearing a crimson shawl coquettishly over her black hair, as fixed the kitchen at that instant.

"Mother, 'Squire Rayner's naked me, and I'm going—"

Mrs. Durrell looked up eagerly and a rosy flush came into her matronly face.

"Of course you accepted him," she exclaimed.

"Oh, I don't mean that he has popped the question," said the girl, looking down with a pretty blush. "Why, mother, how you have opposite me. As if he could ever care anything for me. He's only asked me to teach the summer term of school. Do you think I can?"

"Of course you'll take it," cried the widow. "Why, it's just the chance you need above all others, and, I'm, if you can smart you can be mistress of Rayner Hall before Christmas."

Its blushed hotly and drooped her scarlet face, while she gave her shoulders a very slight upward motion. She would have cared more for a look from a certain pair of eyes than for all 'Squire Rayner's wealth, his big house, conservatories, and all; but she did not care to tell her mother so.

"I think I will try the school at my age," she said, after a pause, very the rightfully. "It is eighteen dollars a month and board, and I can walk the distance from here easily enough." And without waiting to hear her mother's answer she tripped away merrily humming "Auld Lang Syne."

"Don't you see how luck favors Lu?" said the widow. "She will win the Squire, and I don't know of anybody else who'd make him happier or a more careful housekeeper. I'm always said she was cut out for a lady. Now, I'd, if you will hang Sophy Ann to home, I can go down to my grave feeling easy, as knowing that you are all settled."

"Oh, mother, you mustn't say anything about dying yet awhile," said Sophy Ann affectionately. "And I am sure you need not worry about either Lou or me. We can take care of ourselves, I am sure."

"No woman can take care of herself," declared Mrs. Durrell, strongly. "She needs a husband and—and children. I don't believe in single women at all. But if no one falling with you, I suppose. Some folks don't know what's good for them, "sah which she gave a fold of hose a finishing slap, as if to give emphasis to her words.

Carrie quietly raised the geese in the water and smiled placidly, her temper not at all ruffled by her mother's vehement concerning her perspicuous; but the widow would have had an imperfect if she had known all that was in her daughter's mind.

Lou worked begin Monday of the second week after the conversation in the summer kitchen, and Mrs. Durrell was so very good to her for as where she was her favorite daughter, and was with 'Squire Rayner in a dream enamored phenomenon.

"Much my sister's little head turns on her new honor," she said to Carrie. "Why, I'm sure, I'm ashamed for her to be Squire Rayner's wife. She isn't strong enough to do the drudgery of a family."

"But aren't we family, you've always said that," said Carrie, with a peculiar smile.

THE FIRST STRIKE.

The Rebellion of the Factory Girls at Dover, N. H., in 1828.

The first strike among our working people, I think, was at Dover, N. H., in 1828 or 1829. The Cocheco works were established in 1826, and the operatives were a most entirely American girls, who deemed that weaving and spinning were better than farming, and it came "factory girls" on the erection of the works at Dover Falls. A small village sprang up there, and the mills in the works at the falls were Nos. 2, 3 and 4, and I believe they are at the present time. Ice retiling went on amazing 2 and smoothly until the year of which I write. There were rebellious on the part of the corporations that the independent spirit of the fair spinners and weavers could not break. A rule was made that the great gong should be sung at bell-ringing, and those who were late should go through the cunning room a passageway to be used for conviction of pay largely disproportioned to the price paying. This gave great offense, other measures awakened opposition, and on a fine morning the mills were all in a flutter, and the girls, to the number of 800, were to turn them alone. They had a some consultation, and then, forming a procession, within a band, and marched out. Among the last the procession was a large girl, and a stalwart male guard of one for their protection. The composition came down at once, the offensive rules were withdrawn, for the time, and everything went on harmoniously. But there arose some difficulties between Jonathan Carter, a new agent, and Mill No. 2. He was not a fortunate selection for the office, as he had been a sea-captain, and endeavored to introduce ship's discipline among his crew of girls. It would not work, and a general strike took place. The ellipses was overfilled when he ordered the windows of No. 2 to be nailed down. This was done one night, and in the morning, when they found out what had been done, and one of the boon girls had fainted, their anger knew no bounds. A strike in that mill was the come-prance of the central event from an upper window opposite, and such a clatter of tongues has not been heard since Isabel. Agent Carter was sent for, and went among these angry at first, but that he couldn't help, and he came down to coaxing, begging them to return, arguing the necessity for the sailing down, which excited their the ranks, and he compromised the matter by allowing the windows to be opened part way. Other misconducts were given, and they returned to their work, but in the alternation with him they were called the Long Carter, and with ill-looks would be looked like a new acquisition of leopard.—Boston letter Hartford Post.

Skinning Cattle by Electricity.

The depreciation in value of hides from what are known in the trade as "scores," "stains," and "brands," in San Francisco Chronicle, is large, and the introduction of improved laboratory methods in the tanning of hides shows without in jury to either the hide or the tanner, so that no one need be an enumportant a nature hitherto that the thousands of persons engaged in the industry in this country can not fail to experience a certain decree of satisfaction over the introduction in Chicago of an appliance which would appear to be what the trade has been waiting for all along. The invention is based on electric-skinning-knife, and is, like nearly all other good inventions, simple of itself, being virtually nothing more than a slight alteration of the Edison incandescent or arc light, with the glass bulb removed. The knife in construction resembles very much the tweezers employed in telephone offices, and, like it, has a double set of reversed or inverted wires attached to the butt end of the handle, connecting through the body of the instrument to the cutting, or, properly, the burning edge or wire, which, is connected in platinum. The current is entirely under the control of the manipulator of the knife. After the hide is opened in the usual way with an ordinary knife the current is turned on, and the removal of the hide is begun by long sweeps of the sides. The principle is that of burning, as the platinum edge is brought to an intense white heat, yet the edge is so arranged and protected by non-conducting shields that it is impossible to injure either the hides or the carcass. In fact, the hide seems to be torn or pulled off by some unexplained force of the wonderful agent, electricity. It has been demonstrated that most will hold its color better and longer where the electric knife is used, this being accounted for by the fact that the pores are closed by the action of the current, which seems to leave a thin, transparent coating over the entire surface. Another advantage is that the beef, after leaving the establishment, may "weep," as under the old system of removing hides. Aside from the increased speed with which the work is turn off, there are other advantage in the use of electricity. It is stated that the value of hides is increased from 1 to 1 cent a pound, as the body side is left as smooth and even as the inner side of a sheep's pelt.

Unnecessary Violence.

In which consisted nature exacts heavy penalties, is done to the beauty by persons who with gentle, soothing properties make war on disorders in order to relieve their sanities. Constipation is not one of those desperate diseases that require desperate remedies. It may be used a disease at all, but the impossible obstacles it offers to the healthful or beautiful will induce Hostetter's Stomach Bitters to remove it. Dyspepsia, biliousness, fever and ague, and nervousness are also amenable to the influence of this celebrated tonic. Inactivity of the liver, combined with the fatal and sickly symptoms that it produces, is a common cause of the difficulty of getting rid of the bile, which, if not removed, poisons the blood, and produces yellow skin, nausea, and other unpleasant pains. Food with proper assimilation, if properly prepared, imparts vitality to the latter of body, and in the operations of the digestive organs and liver. Fever and ague, dyspepsia and kidney troubles are prevented and cured by this.

The Language of the Cane.

To lay it on the pavement at every step, means, "Object to my money be gone, for I propose to wear out the leather."

To poke a person in the ribs with it, etc is slanderous, if it is done with a crooked one, the jokiest at a slipping match, insinuates "Poor fellow!"

To hurriedly slip it down the pantaloons leg and walk along with it, crooked handle forward, means that you previously been felonious "magnetized" from some unfortunate and the rightful owner is approaching.

To point with it at a rare old painting or pottery gallery indicates that you have an old hard-grained one for their protection. The composition cause down at once, the offensive rules were withdrawn, for the time, and everything went on harmoniously. "What's up?"

"Nothing, except to-morrow is my birthday, and the young lady to whom I am engaged is to call at the house to congratulate me, and make me some little present. I don't care to be there when she calls."

"I don't understand you, Van Styck. If I was engaged to a young lady, and she was going to call and see me on my birthday, I should be the happiest man in New York.

"Yes, but the other two are going to call also all three of them are going to call on me if I am there, don't you understand?" and he hurried into the cab and drove off the 3 o'clock train.—Texas Siftings.

BRIGHAM AND AMELIA.

While the majority of the "faithful" are agitated and excited over the turn affairs have taken, and not a few of them are packing up preparatory to journeying to the new Mormon stronghold, wherever that may be, Amelia Young, the twenty-third and last wife of Brigham Young, goes quietly and serenely about her household duties as usual. She has no love for the Mormons, and she takes no trouble to conceal the fact. Her present residence is one of the most desirable and handsome in the city, and yet it cannot compare with the palatial mansion which old Brigham had built and presented to her, and which still bears the name "Amelia's palace." Old John Taylor holds forth in it at present. But his time, as well as that of the rest of them, bids fair to be short.

The story of Amelia's marriage to Brigham and a few incidents of after life are very interesting. An old lady who at one time was Amelia's schoolteacher at Council Bluffs, Ia., tells me the following tale:

Upon one occasion when Brigham Young was passing through Council Bluffs, on his way to Salt Lake, he caught sight of Amelia's pretty face and fine figure, and immediately resolved to add another one to his harem. The girl's parents were good Mormons and their consent to the union was joyfully given. Not so with the girl. She had a stout will as well as a handsome form and pretty face, and she declared that she would not marry "that ugly old heathen." Her parents, however, were determined not to lose the chance of getting so near heaven by such an alliance, and sternly commanded Amelia to do her duties and take the hand of the all-powerful Brigham. Seeing that she would be compelled to marry him if she staid at home, the girl made her way to a neighbor's, told them her story, and received their sympathy and protection. Her parents instituted a search, during which Amelia hid in a root-cellar, over the door of which was a wood-house. The kind people carried her meals to her without attracting suspicion, until the third day one of the spies employed observed steam arising from a house which the gentleman was carrying to the wood-house.

This led to her discovery, and, as she was under age, her parents took charge of her.

After a hard struggle Amelia finally consented to marry the great Mormon, but declared: "If I do marry him, I'll have my own way, and he will find it out." He did.

Several years after their marriage, upon one occasion Amelia told Brigham to buy her a Singer sewing-machine. The old man promised to send it up that day, and walked off with his hands in his pocket, thinking, doubtless, how many tithes it would take to pay for it. By the time he got down-stairs he forgot what kind of a machine was wanted, consequently it was a Wheeler & Wilson that the men brought up-stairs to Amelia's sitting-room. As soon as that lady saw that her orders had not been obeyed to the letter she deliberately pulled the offensive machine to the head of the stairs, and, giving it a push, down it went, bumpity-bump, until it reached the bottom, all broken to pieces.

The next day a "Singer" stood in the place allotted for it and nothing more was said of the affair. Upon another occasion, when Brigham had a number of distinguished guests, Amelia, who was present at the dinner-table, amused herself by hulling some nuts that were on the table and throwing the shells out of the window. Brigham manifested his annoyance at this proceeding without effect, when finally he exclaimed: "Amelia, my dear, I wish you would not throw those shells on upon the grass." They make such a noise."

"If you don't like to have them there you can pick them up," said the wayward favorite, and she arose from her chair and left the room.

When she had left Brigham turned to his guests and said:

"I hope you will excuse my wife. She is so headstrong that I cannot control her."

Chinese Venality.

If we did not know, on the authority of Bret Harte, that the Chinaman is childlike, as well as bland, we should be compelled to believe that some of the Chinese who testify in the United States courts in this city are snuffing justice and trying to reduce the proceedings to a farce. The testimony of some of them has been grotesquely enough. Several have recently sworn that scars and other permanent physical marks, which, as bearers of descriptive certificates, they ought to be wearing, were received in China by surgery or witchcraft. One who, according to his statement, wore an ineffaceable indian-ink mark on his arm during two years in this country, informed the court that it had washed off in China, and when asked why it did not wash off in this country, stated, without cloud of countenance, that he had never washed his arm in the United States. But the most remarkable case of perjury, perjurer was the one who explained the loss of his queue by saying that the rolling motion of the ship in which he came over caused it to fall off. For examples of perjury which is amusing by reason of its larrikinism the case would be difficult to beat anywhere.—Alta California.

"He was a most peculiar fellow about his clothes," writes a Washington correspondent, speaking of no less a person than the father of His Country, "and some of his brass buttons he had cast with his initials, G. W., and strung their top the legend 'Long Live the President.' Such a button lies before me as I write."

The Mexican Hacendado.

The following interesting interview with a Mexican farmer appears in a recent number of the City of Mexico Two Republics: "What salaries are earned by the farm-hands in your district?"

"They earn 25 cents a day to $5 a month, exclusive of rations, or weekly rations of four alamds or two English bushels of corn, a quarter of a bushels of frijoles (beans), and two pounds of coarse or fine salt. Each man gets this as a weekly allowance."

"Under what conditions are contracts made for farming?"

"The contracts for the sowing of corn and beans are made by advancing to the farm-hands two or three monthly payments before the work commences, which are deducted afterward from their wages, according to agreement. This is done to secure the laborers. They are then watched very carefully. There are sufficient laborers to be had in the municipality where I live, but in other places men are scarce."

"What are the principal agricultural products in your municipality, and what is the annual product?"

"Corn, beans, and sugar-cane are the leading agricultural products. On the average, the municipality produces yearly 70,000 bushels of corn and 4,000 bushels of beans. The sugar-cane crop yields generally 875,000 pounds of sugar and 90,000 pounds of molasses in the shape of cake. There are planted also nearly 2,000,000 mescal magueys. The corn sells at $1 a bushel, the beans at $2.50 a bushel, sugar at $2.50 an arroba of 25 pounds, and the caked molasses at $8 per carga of 300 pounds."

"What are the retail prices of principal articles of consumption?"

"Beef is cheap compared with the City of Mexico. It sells from 6 to 8 cents a pound, and the meat is good, too. Corn retails at 5 and 6 cents an almud—twelfth of a bushel—and beans at 25 cents an almud."

"How does stock sell?"

"The average price of bulls and cows is $10 a head. Heifers sell generally at $14 a head and oxen at $18. Three-year-old colts cost from $10 to $15 each; mares $6 to $8, and horses that have been broken $20. Sheep are valued at $1 a head. Small, thin hogs cost $1.50 each, and fattened hogs at the rate of 10 cents a pound."

"Is it easy to acquire property?"

"No. It is difficult to purchase private property. Good land is sold at $100 a fanega (9½ acres). Second-class land sells for $60 a fanega, and uncultivated land at $25. That is, when the owners of property are willing to sell, which is not often."

"What industries could be established in your district?"

"That is a hard question to answer, because the land in my municipality is not yet developed sufficiently to know what would best flourish there. There are now large sugar refineries and tanneries in some parts of the district in which Cocula is situated. But the country is wild and unsettled yet."

A Submarine Boat.

The submarine boat of Jules Verne's story, directed by the mysterious Captain Nemo, sinking a ship and sailing backwards and forwards through her rigging "like a needle through a piece of sailcloth," has not ceased to impress our imagination, and yet here is Mr. Nordenfelt, with thirty-nine officers representing over European Power, anxiously watching the performance of a vessel in which he fairly puts the novelist's imagination to shame. From the accounts which are published it seems that every objection has been met and overcome with wonderful ingenuity; if the engines which are sinking the boat break down she returns at once to the surface; she cannot sink too far, for an automatic arrangement closes the throttle-valve at any given depth; she has been driven sixteen miles at three knots an hour without returning to the surface, and she can run 150 miles without reoxidizing. Most important of all, a pendulum, working of course automatically, keeps two bow rudders in such respective positions that an "even keel" is absolutely assured. This last is the main point. What every one who steps inside will ask is, Will she turn over? Even the extraordinary moral and physical influence of such a boat in masters warfare will hardly receive the attention until this element of safety matter is settled. Other doubts, as to her comfort, for instance, in a maestrom or if hustled by a whale, are of no importance compared to the possibility of standing on end or lying in the stoke-hole in ten fathoms of water. —Pall Mall Gazette.

An explanation is out of the alleged "cauldron" by Mrs. Anderson of the Prince of Wales. During the performance the Prince sent word to Miss Anderson that he would be glad to call on her between the acts. Miss Anderson replied that it was impossible for her to receive any one between the acts, but that she would be glad to see his royal Highness at the close of the performance. So, when the play was finished, the Prince went behind the scenes and congratulated the American actress on her success. "I thought you were afraid of me," he said, as his shook her cordially by the hand. "O, no," she replied, "I wasn't afraid of you, but its wholly impossible for me to see any one between the acts." The Prince made a courteous reply and there the matter ended. There is every indication that Miss Anderson's advertising agent is capable of utilizing these little stories for all they are worth.

President and Party.

The charge is made that the president fails as a party leader. The people who make it apparently mean that the president ought to establish the strength of the political organization of which he has been always a loyal member by turning over to members of congress the federal patronage of their several districts. Mr. Cleveland evidently takes a different view of his duty. He holds that the best way to strengthen his party is to administer his trust for the best interest of the country. He also believes that democratic congressmen will do their party the best service by attending to their legislative duties and by using their utmost efforts to embody democratic principles in the federal statutes.

The principal value of the existing civil service law lies in its probable effect on the character of congress. For a good many years important legislation has been the task of a very few leaders. The men who are at the head of the present democratic majority of the house of representatives are not disposed to do much more than their share of the work which they were chosen to do; but much the largest part of both sides of the house have been educated to depend for their public places on their adroitness in securing patronage. When the republicans controlled the executive offices the democratic members of congress had not much to gain from their president, but the theory was pretty well established that the administration should help its party by giving to congress the distribution of the postmasterships, collectorships, judgeships, marshalships, and other offices of the general government. The result is that members of congress spend their time in looking after patronage, and their object is not to strengthen their party so much as to establish an efficient machine for securing their own nomination.

In establishing the merit system for the appointment of subordinate employees of the government, the civil service law accomplished two desirable ends. It relieved executive officers of a great pressure, and left them free to discharge their proper duties; it also took away the temptation which congressmen were under to neglect their legislative work in order to secure the appointment of their friends. Under the rule of the republican party this combination of stock gamblers and capital was impregnable. A false aristocracy raised on a throne of suddenly acquired wealth, made the laws, enforced the law, and transgressed the laws as best suited their purpose. The laborer, the mechanic, the farmer, and every man not included in the select few who lead the republican party, was made to pay tribute. Even their own followers, blinded by their own prejudice, bowed down and were shiped, and were defrauded with the common herd.

Is it any wonder that the wage receivers combined to defeat this enemy?

A short time ago ten men, who control the anthracite coal product of these United States, decided on the amount of coal to be mined this summer. Creating an artificial scarcity that the price may be made higher. Not satisfied with that, they deliberately lower the wages of their miners to further enrich themselves. A farmer in Roberts county must sell twenty bushels of wheat to buy one ton of hard coal. The miner in the east must dig ten tons of coal to buy one hundred pounds of flour. Is that right? Where lies the sin? Go to the party that made this monopoly. We could multiply instances, but these suffice to convince any fair-minded man that the leaders of the republican party are responsible for this cruel condition of affairs. The honest followers of these degraded leaders should study facts and refuse to participate in such wickedness any longer.—Roberts Co. (Dak.) Record.

Cleveland and the Veterans.

Washington, April 24.—The president has received a telegram from H. Clay Hall, department commander, transmitting a copy of the following resolutions which were unanimously adopted by the encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic held a few days ago at New York City:

Whereas, It is proper that veterans, irrespective of party should recognize anything done by a public official which demonstrates his intentions to carry out the promise made to the men who dared death for his country, and,

A Buffalo special to the Chicago Times says: The statement of Ex-William Cleveland, brother of the President, that the latter will marry Miss Frances Folsom, having no doubt of the fact that the White House wedding will take place. The wedding, it is said, will be of the most quiet character possible, and it is to be celebrated in June. There will not be a dozen persons present, and, if it is possible, the time of its occurrence will be kept secret until after the ceremony. Miss Folsom is modest, retiring, and sensitive, and her wishes are that there shall be no display. In this she is understood the President concurs."

At Pittsburgh, in the foundry of Singer, Nimick & Co., one thousand pounds of molten steel was accidentally scattered among fifty or more persons, twenty of whom were injured more or less severely.

Barnum's new big elephant, Alice, the former companion of Jumbo, has been safely landed in New York.

It is now pretty certain that the witnesses Charles H. Moore sailed the steamship Oregon. The schooner was a sloop of 85 tons, and was built at Bath in 1866. She was looked in Baltimore with coal, and it was known that she was off Fire Island the night of the disaster, since which time she has not been heard of. There was a crew of nine men on board, every one of whom, it is presumed, went down with her.

The boycott was the subject of denunciatory resolutions adopted by the United Presbyterian Ministerial Association, of Philadelphia.

Defalcations amounting to $20,000, have been discovered in losses sustained by Vickroy & Co.'s Springs, Wyoming.

The special committee appointed by the House of Representatives to investigate the labor difficulties in the Southwest commenced operations at Washington with the testimony of T. V. Powderly. He stated certain abuses along the Missouri Pacific road in the way of exactions for a hospital fund; declared that nothing of a violent nature was ever resorted to by the Knights of Labor, and thought he should soon be able to show a system of taking 25 cents a month from the wages of a man who received $1 a day, and 50 cents from the wages of a man who received $2 a day, and so on in proportion, to pay for the support of a hospital fund. Then the men would be laid off as soon as they are taken sick they are discharged, and are denied the right of entering the hospital. There there are instances, which can be shown, where men have made contracts to buy land from the company on regular monthly installments, and have paid from $50 to $100 on the installments, they were discharged from the employment of the company, in that section of the country, it is different from the rule.

Witnesses said that the men had asked in vain for redress, the General Superintendent of the Missouri Pacific Railway refusing to agree to a conference. Continuing, he said:

I have heard, also, that along the Iron Mountain road, the superintendents and foremen are forbidden to employ Knights and laborers are forced to commence shots in those mines. The men always are needed, in so many words, that they are Knights of Labor, they are reminded that it is against the rules of the company for employees to join with the order. The Iron Mountain Company is a corporation through the legislature, and a man will be discharged as soon as he shows a word of sympathy. The men whose money is invested in the railroad know nothing of these things. I have no doubt they would discharge in these shops.

Mr. Powderly said that the committee would find proofs of all these things. The men complain, also, he said, that convicts are brought from the penitentiaries in Texas to work on the railroads, and that upon one train two boys aide by side with bonnet men engaged in track repairing.

William O. McDowell, a prominent member of the Knights of Labor, appeared as a witness before the Congressional labor committee at Washington, and explained the objects of the organization. There are, he said, 700,000 members.

To obviate the members by helping them to educate themselves, by helping them to see that which the average workman has seldom time to read and hardly to UTI him from the evil influences to which he has fallen through ignorance, and under the influence of an employer instead of an employee, to so educate him by the time he has served his term of apprenticeship that he will know that he has a little money with and grasp the subjects which affect not only himself but his employer; that he will become a better workman, command better wages, be more respectable with his employer help him to such points that he will be able to pay better wages.

Mr. McDowell, being asked what was the original cause of the Southwestern difficulties, made a long statement, involving the difference between the principles of the order and those of work, and quoted itself as saying that by making a change of that sort in the Western Union Telegraph Company he had effected a saving of 90 per cent. He added that the general cause of disasters and of concerted strikes all over the country had been the unsuccessful strike on the home-car lines in New York last February. That had commenced with entire and public sympathy that workmen, whenever they had a grievance or wrong, joined together and made applications to form assemblies of Knights of Labor. This was so general that the order had increased some in the month of February last than it had in the prior eight years. As no sufficient reason he alleged the universal system of enforcing railroad stock, which made it necessary for railroad managers to screw down the rates of labor as much as possible.

Mr. D. Humphreys, of the Quincy Telephone Company of New York, testified before the Pan-Electric investigation committee at Washington that he called in September on Mr. Garland to induce him to bring suit against the Bell Company, but the Attorney General refused to hear him or to refer him to anybody else. Witness finally presented his petition to Mr. Goode, and it was referred to the Interior Department. Witness left Mr. Garland's presence with the conviction that he was insane. Impolitic.

Switchmen employed by the Lake Shore Road in Chicago and vicinity, to the number of seventy-four, struck because the company refused to yield to their demands.

There were 153 failures in the United States reported to Bradstreet's during the week, against 141 in the preceding week, and 196, 155, 160, and 111 in the corresponding weeks of 1885, 1884, 1883, and 1882, respectively. About 23 per cent. were those of small traders whose capital was less than $5,000.

To strengthen the hands of Messrs. Gladstone and Parnell, the Executive of the Irish National League of America calls upon the various branches to organize citizens' meetings, secure the presence of representatives, and procure the passage of resolutions commanding the home rule and land purchase schemes. They also ask the organization to open up its ranks, and permit anybody at this time to cause discord or divide its strength.

In response to the demands of the Knights of Labor, who compose most of the employes of eight big mills in Augusta, Ga., for an increase of 10 per cent. in wages, and the submission of charges in the Dunlap Hat Company case to a committee, the Presidents issued a circular ignoring the Knights and calling for communications from the employes as men and not as members. Five furniture manufactories of Chicago, employing four thousand hands, have signed and organized to resist demands by workmen. A resolution was passed that no skilled mechanic be employed by any member without a letter of recommendation from the firm for which he last worked. The strikers in St. Louis having received $12,000 from New York, have adopted the policy of laying off those who have been made contracts to buy land from the company on regular monthly installments, and have paid from $50 to $100 on the installments; they were discharged from the employment of the company. Notes and News.

The Manistee Sentinel, a strong republican paper, also hears the rumbling of the tornado which is to strike the ninth district next fall. Read its forebodings and predictions. Hon. L. G. Mason, of Muskegon, who has been talked of as the democratic nominee for congress in the next election, was on Monday last elected mayor of Muskegon, on a union ticket by over 200 majority. If Mr. Mason has any idea of allowing his name to enter the race for congress, he will prove a very hard man to beat in the nomination, and a still harder man to beat in election. At the last election Cutcheon carried Muskegon by about 600 votes, and if that vote should be changed into a vote of 200 for the other fellow, it would make a big hole in the 2,700 plurality of Cutcheon's vote two years ago, and effectually wipe out his 1,000 majority in the district. The prohibition vote will also be very much stronger next fall than it was two years ago. Under these circumstances republicans can very readily see that there must be a very solid and perfect harmony in their party on the subject of Cutcheon's fitness for the place, in order to prevent their candidate from getting unmercifully slaughtered in a district which under good, healthy conditions and a wise policy ought to give 3,000 republican majority. With Muskegon giving from 200 to 250 against him, (and many think it will be more) a fusion victory at Big Rapids on Monday together with the big majority for Mason in Muskegon, we confess it does begin to very sensibly for our present representative, even if he does reside in a district which is under favorable conditions, republican by 3,000 majority.

The primary purposes of the Knights of Labor organization seek the promotion of wise, beneficent and humane principles. Every movement of whatever kind or nature, which has for its object the betterment, elevation and moralization of those who "eat their bread in the sweat of their brow" will naturally and rightly invoke the sympathy and support of all broad-minded people. The Knights of Labor, therefore, in their struggle with greedy monopoly and soulless corporations, should feel assured that public sentiment will instinctively range itself on their side in all their lawful and proper undertakings. But the Knights should remember that Rome was not built in a day, neither can all their grievances be righted in a month or a year. The two virtues which they should cultivate above all others are confidence and moderation. It will not do to stay strikes and boycotts become so frequent as to invite the ridicule and contempt of those even against whom they are ordered, and be regarded as nuisances by the general public. There is imminent danger that this condemnatory condition of affairs may soon obtain in the very near future unless wiser counsels are followed. Leadership is a safer leader than brute force. As much preferable as is intelligence and principle to error and anarchy. Strikes should be avoided except as a last resort, when all other means of redress, including arbitration, have failed. Boycotting should be boycotted.—Charlotte Republican.

The following are the legislative rules relative to fishing with spears, seines, nets, etc., in Michigan: "That it shall not be lawful hereafter at any time to kill or destroy, or attempt to kill or destroy, any fish in any of the waters of the state of Michigan by the use of dynamite, lucendum or giant powder, or any other explosive substance or combination of substances, or by the use of Indian cocks, or any other substance or device which has a tendency to stupefy the fish; nor shall any person kill or attempt to kill, or injure by shooting or spearing, any fish during the months of March, April, May, June, July, August, and September, in any waters of this state except Lakes Michigan, Superior, Huron, St. Clair, the Detroit and St. Clair rivers, the Lake Erie and the harbors connected with said lake shall any person catch or take any fish with seines, pound nets, traps, or in any species of continuous nets, in any of the waters of the state, except Lakes Michigan, Superior, Huron, St Clair, and the Detroit and St. Clair rivers, and Lake Erie and the harbors connected with said lakes. Provided, nothing in this act shall be construed as prohibiting sole owners of fish ponds from fishing therein as they may think proper; or as prohibiting any person from catching minnows, worms, redsides, or dragons during the months of March, April and May, by spearing or dip nets; and providing further, that this act shall not apply to spearing fish in the upper peninsula during the months of April and May."

An exchange says: "After you get on your ear and make up your mind to stop your paper to notify publisher feel humiliated, just place your finger in water and then look for the hole. Then you will know how sadly you are missed. The man who thinks a paper cannot survive without his support ought to go off and stay a while. When he comes back he will find that half his friends didn't know he was gone. The other half didn't care a cent, and the world at large hadn't kept an account of his movements whatever. You will find things you cannot endorse in every paper. Even the Bible is rather plain and hits some hard licks. If you were to get mad and burn your Bible, the hundreds of presses would still go on printing them, and if you were to stop your paper and call the editor all sorts of ugly names, the paper will still be published. And what is more, you will sneak around and borrow a copy of it every week from your neighbor. It would be much better to keep your vest pulled down and your subscription paid a year in advance."

Capt. E. P. Allen, of Ypsilanti, upon a recent business trip in Canada, was surprised at the almost universal sentiment in favor of annexation to the United States. Among farmers, merchants, lawyers and business men of all classes he found almost without exception the impression that their interests would prosper better if Ontario were a state of this Union.

Lawlessness and Business.

If the anthracite coal miners in Pennsylvania were on a strike, and they should hold meetings at which they would announce that no more coal should be mined until they had received an advance in wages, there would be considerable talk about lawlessness, and it is probable that the state militia would be sent to the scene.

The managers of the railroads which run in this region, and over which the entire anthracite product must be transported, meet and say that no coal shall be sent to market beyond a certain mound, and not any miles they receive an increase in the price. This is called business, and nobody suggests that the militia be sent to the mines to raise the blockade and set traffic in motion.

These railway managers do not own and control all of the mines, but their action with reference to those that they do control is final to all, leaving the men who own coal lands cannot market their product without the consent of the individuals who operate the roads. As to them, therefore, the embargo of the managers is as arbitrary and lawless as would be the action of a mob of miners in blockading the tracks or disabling machinery in the shafts.

Not until we reach a better understanding as to what is business and what is lawlessness will it be possible for government to interfere much in labor disputes without injustice to somebody. The conspiracy of the anthracite coal ring is a more lawless one than any of which Mr. Gould has complained in the southwest.—Chicago Herald.

Her Majesty Ranavalomanjaka, Queen of Madagascar, was represented by Rainoniharivelo, who signs his Majesty's title thus: "Ny Youmbohm. Oil. D. P. Lehohen ny Mpanno Rakanda ny Vahoaka" (which means, I suppose, "Lieut. Honor, Officer of the Rear, Chief Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs"), and by a mark of the name of Rainimaka, whose title I forget. THE TOILER.

BY PERSIMAN.

The hum of toil in millions
Has become so empty cant,
Their records rating celious
Are but dreams of golden sheen,
Hark the cry of countless thousands
That was thus ere far blessed,
Toiling for a scanty maintenance
Half wielding they know dead.

Hear the sweeping wives and daughters
Tend the spindle and the loom,
Hear the groans, sighs and failures,
How despondently they stand
On the treadmill wave of labor,
How despair is their guide,
Yet they pray the ancient Sagas
For the hoped-for better days.

Better days are always coming
To the honest men who toil,
While they are waiting, hoped faces
Grow as furrowed as the soil,
Their eyes are dimmed, their shoulders
Bow with privation's rod,
Then here grinds the intolerable
Heel of the man who toils.

Let us encourage the sufferer's cause,
Let us encourage the toiler
Help from despair the laboring mass,
Hope to him to the light,
Tell him their reign is with conquer,
And, the light the skies are overcast,
Tell them it is that the noon-day sun,
And will shine forth at last.

The eve a better time a coming,
All the people on be trained,
Where the man that turns the furrow
Shall be owner of the land
Where the man that wields the hammer
Is to have his share in a stake,
And the author shall share the profits
With the owner and the jack.

Organize co-operation,
Hie the only thing to do,
Let the toiler be a thinker
And the thinker be a toiler
It will bring us all together
To the happy days to come,
When we all will have an interest
In the toilers' lean home.

"QUEEN OF MY HEART."

BY NO. 6520.

And he was So tall and straight and strong, so young and hearty, so full of vigorous and graceful action, so manly in his treatment of men, so gentle and courteous with women, always so quick-witted and sunny-hearted, and so free from snobbishness, the waiter at his restaurant table, the barber who shaved him, the bootblack who retorted to his gay sallies, his landlady and my lady in her chamber of state, business men with whom his shrewd, sharp notions, mainly bearing and "sunny" was instant favor. Old and young, rich and poor, all joined in the unanimous verdict that he was a "splendid young fellow," the "ifs" and "if onlys" which frequently followed being swallowed up in the admiration akin to love with which he was regarded by all with whom he had to do. Once in a while a phenomenon, a woman—a thoroughly good wife and mother—asked: "And a dangerous young fellow?" but she was an old "sober-sides" any way, and, indeed, the scrupulous respect which she unfailingly received from him allayed, if it did not quite dispel, the instinct within herself. And so, by right of blood and brains and youth, he reigned, as he deserved, a king among men—"a splendid young fellow."

"So, then, Gratia, you positively refuse! Will your answer be this always? Is there no hope that it may be different when I return from this trip?"

A quick catching of the breath, a convulsive tightening of the arm arm about his neck, and he had to bend low to catch the whispered word "none" which fell from among the soft hair that stood the tiny form within his arms.

"You have not the right love in your heart for me, then, or you would not answer thus," were the cruel words he forced himself to utter, while he gently, but very firmly, unlocked the clasped fingers and disengaged himself from their hold, closely watching all the while, the pain in these shrinking hidden upon his breast; then slowly rising and putting her quite from him, he began to make preparations for his departure, when, with a sharp cry, the girl flung herself at his feet in a perfect passion of agonized entreaty that he should believe her great love for him, imploring him to love her still, even if they should never meet again, to let her memory at least remain with him wherever he might go.

Deepest pity stirred the soul of the man as he looked down upon her and noted the havoc which a six months' separation, with the last three days of fateful struggle, had made with the bright, laughing beauty who had won his heart, and sincerely he wished they had never met. But the pride of worldly distinction, the influence of an ambitious mother, the promptings of a selfishness not his own, led him on to the final conflict.

"We may as well end this here and now, Gratia," he said, very gently. "Indeed, it is quite necessary that we should, for"—very slowly, dreading the effect of his words—"for—I am—going to—be—married. My mother has persuaded upon me to quit the road, and has secured for me an interest in a large manufacturing business, which my uncle controls, in the Northwest. She has already moved there, and there I am expected to join them in a few days. Through them I met the lady who is to be my wife. An heiress, rich, good-looking, gentle, who will no doubt make an excellent helpmeet for young traits." You will bid me happiness, Gratia, won't you? Surely we may part as friends."

He need not have feared an outbreak. Neither sound nor motion indicated that the form cowering at his feet heard one word of the message—naught save the pitiful shudder which passed through her frame. Death, indeed, but with this difference: the soul, too suddenly stricken to escape, died within, and remained—the corpse of a heart—within a living body.

Lifting her in his arms, tenderly as a father might a daughter he saw suffer, he laid her on the poor little hard lounge, and pushing back the masses of beautiful auburn hair such rare and beautiful hair he kissed her reverently many times, as one might the face of the loved dead, and bidding her good-by, once more he slowly left the room—languingly, as if hopeful of a recall to the last moment. A gentle but sure click of the latch—a light step on the stair—a slam of the outer door—a retreating tread on the pavement below—and Fate had done her worst.

It is a provincial town, but one of those bustling, wide-awake, welcoming sort of places, where, on arriving, one throws aside his cares, and, forgetting business and wrangling, loves to stay. Of large manufacturing interests, it has grown quickly prosperous, and its people, proud and happy thereat, let the overflow of their pride and happiness fall upon the stranger within their gates, who thus happily found, quickly becomes, and forever remains, its friend.

In a large handsomely furnished parlor, bright with rich furniture and tasteful hangings, the glow of the firelight coloring the whole as a painting, a tall, stripping fellow with fair, sunny countenance is reclining in careless grace on a low divan on one side of the cheerful fire; a dark, handsome lady, not long past middle age—a proud, well-bred, well-kept-looking lady—is seated by a small table on the other. So like, yet so unlike, this mother and son!

Some unpleasant subject is evidently under discussion, a shade of disturbance over the features of the mother, the nervous folding and unfolding of the shapely hands in her lap, the tapping of the foot on the soft rug, and the low quick tone and fall of the flowers which the young fellow has just kissed into place on her bosom, show the presence of an emotion not happy.

"You cannot fail to note, mother, that Mabel and I were never cut out for each other. She bores me terribly, and nothing I can say or do seems to give her any pleasure. I honestly believe myself the girl is devoid of the sense of pleasure. I can't have——"

"Silence, my son! Remember you speak of your promised wife. Your engagement alone should curb even such thoughts as these!"

He has risen, and is standing respectfully by her side.

"You must not be angry with me, mother—indeed, you will not—when I tell you that Mabel and I have already broken our engagement, and she, tonight, is free as I am from bonds we should never have worn. Hugh Cameron will please her every bit as well as I, and he, I assure you, is quite charmed with her—indeed, for this I introduced them. I have arranged to relieve us all of embarrassment," he continued, his voice deepening with the manful earnestness of his resolution, "by accepting a very fine position with a San Francisco house, for whom I shall travel till I slow myself worthy of something better. Within ten days I hope to start for there."

Surprise, anger, mortification, grief, quickly chase one another over the pale face of the lady. Whatever feelings he may have of the truth of her sons argument, or admiration for his startling independence of character, is adroitly concealed by the haughty dignity of her manner and the ice tone of the reproaches that fall upon his ear, as, for the first time in her life, she withdraws from the touch of her idolized son.

"There is no other course left to one, mother," he said at last. "I trust you will agree that it is the wisest. It is what you yourself would have me do. Mother, you know me and you know her. Can you blame me?"

He gently strokes the shining black braids with the soft, magnetic touch which has conquered every woman who ever felt it—save one—and drawing her face toward him raises it and kisses her on the lips. "Your silence is your blessing go with me as I leave you."

Her heart is melted, and like every other woman—save one—regardless alike of pride, ambition, consequences, present or future, she turns her eyes to his, and with all the mother in her cry, "O, my darling son!" she throws her arms around him and sobs out her grief on his breast.

It is chilly, for San Francisco, and in an elegant room at one of the best hotels a splendid young fellow is smoking in front of a huge fire, one arm thrown over his head, the other stearing the fine havana back and forth through its accustomed path. He is less boyish-looking, a shade heavier, perhaps, but with the same bonnie debonair grace of person and manner as when, over a year ago, he started out for the San Francisco house.

He has since traveled over most of the Western country, giving the best of his splendid talents to the success of his business connexion, till the firm, not slow to discover the enterprise and ability of the "young drummer from Illinois," called him off the road into the house, where he speedily rose, till now he is the junior partner of one of the richest mercantile houses in the country.

But, all through his travels and successes, there ever lived with him the memory of a shabby little room with its scanty furnishing, and the sad, stricken figure on the poor little hard lounge, with all her great wealth of beauty and love for him; for with all his varied experience with women of all kinds, classes, and degrees, never does he find such wealth of love, such passionate worship, such unselfish devotion as that which fell at his feet with its piteous appeal of word and look that bitter night over a year ago; and as the memory of it grows and brightens, so enormous does the selfish cruelty of his conduct become in his eyes that many a time he wishes to be somebody else, that he may soundly horsewhip himself for shame of it. Daily stronger grows the desire to know what has become of her. Dead perhaps, perhaps married—a sharp sting follows the thought—and to night in the firelight, a resolution shapes itself in his heart and brain—the rich successful man of the world—to go and see.

But his reverie is interrupted by the breaking in upon him of three bright, dashing fellows who have come, as usual, to the fountain head to decide what disposition to make of the evening. The party is undecided whether to remain at home and enjoy a quiet game of "draw," or go to the theater, till a sudden, "Heads we go, tails we stay," induces them of reciprocility, and a coy "Heads it is!" settles the question, and to the thoughtful smoker is left the vesting vase as to where it shall be.

"Queen of One Heart," the title of a new opera just then nowing a successful run at the California, strikes his fancy, and a half hour later finds the interesting quartette—comfortably cushioned, "within long range" to be sure, but in good view of the stage.

Too well accustomed to his partiality for female beauty on or off the stage, his companions do not notice the sudden change in expression, the marked attentiveness of manner, and the prolonged use of the opera glass by their friend, as the "favorite" advances slowly to the footlights.

Favorite, indeed! and small wonder! Much rare, peerless beauty! A small, graceful form, a mass of wonderful auburn hair, and dark, and even—restless, and glowing like coals of fire as they roam fitfully over the house—down stairs, over the galleries, through the boxes, and wearily back to the lights at her feet.

She sees nothing, however, but the glimmer of light, the dusk-tinted sea, and the shadows thrown around like a cloak.

It is the last night of a long and successful engagement, and a feeling akin to love for the great mass of human beings who have come, praised, and made her their idol, stirs within her at the well-known tone of saturation which welcomes her presence. She turns it to them to show how the "Queen of One Heart" can smile.

And never was part so played before. The fervid glow of genius, excited to white heat, melted and beat and shaped the scenes through which she passed, entranced the ear, startling the hearts, and unsealing the sources of tears beneath them, and more than one close observer noted the unwonted excitement, the unusual blaze of the luminous eyes, and the flush on each cheek, and the passionate vibration of the exquisite tones, and one young fellow, in a seat far back, dropped his glass and sank back in his seat with a sigh—perhaps of relief. "It is impossible! It cannot be! She had a dear little voice, to be sure, with wind she sang her quaint little ballads for him—but this! Oh, no, it is impossible!"

Once, twice, thrice, she is recalled. For the fourth time the thrilling tones pour down the peals of applause. The beautiful—we may use the word, the wonderful face illuminated by outpouring, the whole frame in a tremble of passionate excitement; when suddenly, and without a second warning, a break in the voice—a swaying of the slight figure, a few gasping sounds—silver—and a wooden line of glittering ostrums, a white face disturbed by the fall of the lovely head upon the left side, meet the gaze of the grief-stricken crowd.

Expressions of pity, shame, and terrorse at their thoughtless greediness pass from lip to lip as the people in grenagle disperse, and formerly in the small crowd of the more venturesome the press behind the scenes is a full, elegant form, with an unaccustomed look of anxiety in the bold, bright eyes, as he passes his few courtesies regrets to the manager who received him.

But "Madamoiselle is too ill to see any one. Only a trifling indisposition, to be sure: a slight attack of the heart to which she is subject; still the doctor insists on absolute quiet, or serious results may follow.

"I will see her in the morning," he thinks, as he comes away. "I must know for certain." And Fate meets him at his hotel with a telegram—business of the utmost importance demanding his presence immediately with the Eastern branch of the house—and six hours later, with a small grip in his hand, and a great disturbance in his heart, he is on his way toward the rocky fence between him and—Way! Way! Way! Way!

It is Christmas Day in Chicago, and the Western country, giving its quota of coin around with the jingle of many bells, and the voices and gay laughter of the merry riders.

The reflected light of the snow world streams into a long, low room of some little room whose poor shabbiness withstood the gay decorating within its four walls just one year and a half ago.

But it is no longer the poor little room, with scanty furnishing, but a dainty boudoir, in which everything that refined taste could add to our world's furnish is to be found.

Only two familiar objects remain—a large, brown arm-chair and a tiny shelf! The big chair stands in a corner, looking sullen and lonesome, and—empty. The shelf is mounted in a gold frame, and ingeniously covered with glass, its contents—the ashes of two cigars!

A girl, frail and slender, but very beautiful, is lying on a soft couch of creamy satin. Rich auburn hair falls over the cushion. The eyes are closed, the little hands crossed over a bosom whose slow, even rise and fall show that the attitude of weariness belongs not to the land of sleep. The breath comes fitfully through the sweet parted lips, and all the tears have not quite left their beautiful eyes.

A large bouquet of flowers is on a table near by, and lies—for it an open letter, both messages from the manager of the opera of which she is now the acknowledged and idolized star—dear, kind gentleman, who has been her brother, friend, and counselor ever since the day she first appeared before him a miserable, beautiful girl, and begged him for God's sake to save her from the dark lake by letting her go with chagrin. He never sought to know her trouble, only to share it, to help her bear it; and now, to save her the excitement of all future public living, he offers to make her his wife.

And she has wept all her faint strength away, for grief that one more must suffer; for—strive as she will, it is all in vain—the heart has died within her, and wakes but to one call.

Hark! A vigorous ring of the door bell. Voices in the hall. A light step on the stair, a low knock. It cannot be! It cannot be!

Startled into his open arms. Two soft arms hard to their accustomed place. It cannot be! His eyes, his voice, his touch again! Madly she clings to him, pressing kiss upon kiss on lips, and eyes, and hair, calling him by every endearing name in a low, cooing voice, more like a young mother with her babe, till suddenly, memory returns, and, with a cry, she starts back, and speaks a bitter humiliation to tear herself apart. But the strong arms are there, and are not now willing to give up what they have got at last, blindly.

"I have come back to ask your pardon, Gratia, for the great wrong I once did you. To ask you to forget the past. To ask you to be my true wedded wife! Do you hear, dear? my own true wife."

But the lady—the lady that—

"God would not let such a cruel happening separate two such loving souls as mine, dear. He would not for you."

And he tells her, little by little, of his book with Mabel, the parting with his mother, his travels, successes, fine prospects, his amber recall.

"But you do not answer me, dear. Surely you can forgive——"

He stops to raise the beautiful head from its hiding places—but no voice, no moan, no response. One little hand, pitifully upturned, falls over his arm. The other—the tell-tale clutch of the left side!

And long may he call without an answer, and often may he press the sweet lips for reply. For the poor little heart so long dead, in ceasing to live, has ceased to beat, and poor little Gratia had Christmas in heaven!

HUMOR.

If American ladies have no temper, we don't see how they can lose it so often.

WOMEN seldom complain of their mothers-in-law. They know how it is themselves.

NEVER borrow trouble. The interest you have to pay for the accommodation is excessive.

THE man who assumes that he can rule the universe can generally be found fractious.

At the Antipmy's: Collector of curios—"Have you any genuine Roman fasciculus?" Dealer (off his guard)—"I am sorry, but they're all being rented and won't be ready until next week."

THE higher one gets the more conceited he becomes. Even the church steeples are vainer than any other in this subject to a change we do not aspire to point out.—California Mercury.

A SCOTCH minister was once preaching to quite a small congregation, when he observed they were all asleep but one man, and he was a parties idiot. NEVER do anything hastily. A man in Atlanta, Ga., after the prohibition triumph in that city, sent clear to New York, N. He might have sent to Texas and got a mule for the same money that would have been of some account to him.—Brooklyn Eagle.

He came to the postoffice one day with an ordinary letter sorely worn by rough handling and postage-stamps. "Why, Andrew!" exclaimed the Postmaster, "you don't need all these stamps. One is enough." "Yes, I know it," said Andrew. "The Government has spoiled my pension money on this letter, and I'm sending it to the Pension Office to see what they will do about it."

American Bald Heads.
It has been estimated that one-half the adult men of American birth living in our cities are bald-headed. The estimate is not exaggerated, if it is applied to persons above the age of thirty, and it may be rather under the mark. If, now, it be conceded that one-half of our American business and professional men are bald at the present time, it would be interesting to speculate on the condition of the heads of their descendants some hundreds of years from now. The probabilities point toward a race of hairless beings, and it would be extremely liable to be propagated in the male line, and to appear a little earlier in each generation. The American nation is threatened with the catastrophe of a universal alopecia.
The answer had almost always been that it is due to the excessive stress of the ceaseless mental and physical activity to which American minds of business and modes of living condemn. From the visitors gallery of the Stock Exchange, for example, one views a mass of shaving pates belonging, as a rule, to rather young men.
The sons of prematurely bald fathers should bear in mind that if they wish to save their hair it will only be through industrious attention to their scalps. The much neglected surface should be thoroughly cleansed at certain intervals. It should be carefully and regularly examined, and if it be unhealthy, dry and scaly, the proper applications should be made to it. The wearing of unventilated hats is one of the greatest sources of failure of nutrition of the hair, and these must be avoided. The beard never falls out, because it gets plenty of sunlight and air. These are what the hair of the scalp needs, also. Women are less bald than men, because, for one reason, their scalps are better ventilated. In time, civilization has made the hair-producing organs of the scalp delicate and feeble. They have to be nursed and cared for, or they become atrophied and disappear. Young Americans who do not wish to lose their hair before they are forty, must begin to look at their scalps before they are twenty.—Medical Record.

A Bruised Foot A True Story.

M. A. L.

"Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging: Whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise."

Mr. B. was helping raise a building. A log rolled upon his foot and bruised it. There was no bone broken, no joint dislocated, no sprain. He was sure he was not hurt much. He was advised to go home, and do something for his foot, but did not think it necessary. In a few days it became inflamed and sore. After trying some remedies, it was better. He was restless and impatient, and used it too much, and it was again worse. For some time it was better and worse alternately. At length it was so much worse that he consulted a physician. The doctor told him he thought he could save him in a short time. But just as soon as he was a little better, he dismissed the doctor. He was soon taken worse. All this time he was drinking whiskey freely. When called again, the doctor told him that he could not be cured unless he abstained from strong drink and kept still. He gave heed to the doctor's charge for a little while, but when his foot was better, he again drank liquor, and his foot became so painful, and so badly inflamed that he was obliged to take his bed. Then the doctor told him that unless he entirely abstained from drink he would lose his foot. It would be necessary to cut it off to save his life. But if he would not drink at all, he was sure he could save his foot. He stopped drinking for a few days and was improving. Then he thought he would run the risk of gratifying his appetite. Soon his foot was so bad that amputation was necessary. Liquor was kept from him. The operation was performed successfully. So long as he was kept from drinking whiskey, he seemed to do well. But he could not live very long in this way. Death came. The whiskey killed him, as his physicians had said. He had drank too much; his blood was affected badly. He gave him self up to his appetite, until he had no power, no desire to resist it. He may have drank many times, before he acquired this strong appetite. But it became so strong, that he was conquered, before he was aware of it. Where will this man's portion be in the world to come? What kind of a world was he fitted for?

Little Phil as a Speculator.

John Mackey has gone to Washington to lobby through a claim of $250,000 which, he insists, the government owes the Bank of Nevada on account of money advanced to land speculators and surveyors and sharks. It is not exactly known where General Sheridan is now, but it is to be hoped he is not in Washington. If Sheridan should ever meet Mackey at close range, there is no knowing what the result might be. Sheridan is short. Mackey is tall, but the one is a fighter and the other isn't. Mackey once got Sheridan to make an investment of over $12,000 in the Sierra Grande Mine shown in New Mexico. This was the famous George Roberts steal, and most of those who got jammed never swimmed red. Sheridan would not perhaps have squealed loud as not to hold that Mackey committed a base nothing whatever to do with the affair, but he had no money in it, and was merely backing George Roberts, an old cassier, in the latter's scheme. Worth little. Did get out to the extreme to never squeezed, but he had for John Mackey. He made a journey from Chicago to New York expressly. He saw the President of Mr. Mackey and the "Are we Trompers," and the man with the pick underground gave way to the man on the black horse. History will perhaps never contain the record of that interview, but the story is that the extraordinary raised his nun-r and got out his stake brave. He got his $12,000 back.—Chicago Herald.

TEN YEARS AGO, on December 20th, 1875, The CHICAGO DAILY NEWS was founded. It was the pioneer of low-priced journalism in the west. From the first the controlling conviction of its managers has been that a "cheap paper" should be cheap only in price; that its news should be as fresh and complete, its editorial discussion as able, and its general tone and character as pure and healthful as its best and highest-priced contemporary. This has been its ideal. How well it has succeeded in the actual attainment of so high a standard is best evidenced in the fact that it now regularly prints and sells over 150,000 papers a day,—a larger circulation than that of all other Chicago dailies combined.

The CHICAGO DAILY NEWS is an INDEPENDENT newspaper. It is not partisan. Neither is it a neutral. It is a paper of positive opinion, expressed without fear or favor. It seeks the patronage of people who love country more than party.

The CHICAGO DAILY NEWS is the only 2 cent paper in the west that is a member of the Associated Press. It prints ALL THE NEWS.

Sold by all news dealers at two cents per copy. Mailed to any address, postage prepaid, for one dollar per year, or for a shorter time at rate of fifty cents per month. Address Daily News, Publisher. The DAILY NEWS, 169 Fifth Ave., CHICAGO, ILL.

The CHICAGO WEEKLY NEWS—8 pages, 64 columns—is the largest dollar weekly in America.

Near Oil Sand, Warren County, Pa., it is estimated that gold has been found in paying quantities.

The stove foundry of Sherman S. Jewett & Co., Buffalo, N. Y., employing 800 men, has shut down because of labor agitations.

By the burning of a railroad bridge near Somerset, the Boston express train, in Pennsylvania, six Italian laborers and their foreman were crushed to death.

The suit of Janeway & Co., of New Brunswick, N. J., against the Pennsylvania Railroad for $250,000 damages resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff for $12,000 for loss of bulk property and trade. The suit was a result of the opening of New Brunswick as an old and a freight train. The freight killed and left in Janeway's paper factory, which was hinged to the ground.

C. E. McChesney, Indian Agent at Cheyenne River, has arrived upon all the residents of Fort Pierre, Dakota, notice to close all their business dealings establishments on the Sioux reservation and to quit within three days. The village has 500 inhabitants, and the enforcement of the order will entail a loss of $500,000. The spring mills on which the squatters live were erected by the Sioux chiefs to the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad Company, but Congress failed to ratify the sale.

At St. Louis last week United States Commissioner Edsons, T. Allen sold under foreclosure of mortgages at public auction the Wabash, St. Louis and Pacific Railroad, the total price paid for the entire property being $62,000. The commissioners appointed to the stock and bond holders to look after their interests were the only bidders, and the whole system, comprising the St. Joseph and St. Louis Branch, was purchased by them. W. E. Dodge, its President, purchased the latter road for $7.

An unpatrolled river was reported from Seward County, Kansas. The wife of a farmer named Jones, Brunson was assaulted and robbed by Felix Dugan, a half-witted German, who has been for some time cutting the throats of farmers' wives in Dickinson, Geary, Saline and adjacent counties. During an absence of Mr. Brunson Dugan assaulted his helpless wife, who, bound her hand and foot, and cut her throat from ear to ear. He then poured a quart of oil and set the house on fire, but the woman was yet breathing, in the death struggle he threw herself out of the burning tenement. Mrs. Brunson was conscious, and when discovered the unfortunate lady was a sea from head to foot. A neighbor in that sparsely settled region who happened to be passing by found him with wild frenzy, but dared not approach Gen. Sypher to Bell, which covered the article and said the bill should be so amended.

DEAR SIR:—I find you herewith an amendment of Gen. Sypher's, which I do not think is well considered, and if Congress is to pass the bill it should be carefully considered and well and duly considered.

Washington telegram: "President Cleveland's reasons for the labor question is quite generally regarded here from a party point of view. Republican Senators and Representatives affect to see in it clearly a bid for support of the Independent party by workingmen. Democratic members of Congress say that it is unfair to assert that it was written with any partisan purpose in view, while Republicans claim it is simply an effective campaign document. Neither party seems pleased at the attempt to make it a fault with the general tone of Mr. Cleveland's recommendations. Senator Beck heartily endorses the message, and says he would like to see a labor commission consisting of Morris Thurman, Jo Pendel, and Hoeking, which he says would command respect everywhere and settle the labor question." The representatives of the Knights of Labor have been attending the meetings of the House special committee on the subject, but do not think it goes far enough. Mr. Powderly wants a Department of Labor established and Mr. Pendel wants a commission created, and to leave it given jurisdiction over railroad corporations.

Prohibition met with an overwhelming defeat at Richmond, Va., the vote resulting in a majority of 5,501 in favor of licensing the sale of liquors. The vote in Manchester, a suburb of Richmond, was anti-prohibition, and in Richmond the majority against prohibition was 1,158 majority.

The Republicans of Oregon, in convention at Portland, nominated Lafayette Grover for Congress by a unanimous vote. John H. Wilson, of Portland, was nominated for Congress on a unanimous vote. John Burnett, of Portland, was nominated for Congress on a unanimous vote. John Bennett, of Washington County, for Congress, and George W. Mellish, of Columbia County, for Secretary of State. The resolutions adopted condemn the course of Postmaster General Vaas, through which the Republican party has lost its political prestige; denounce the alleged civil-service reform as the pretext to power as a sham, and the attempt to substitute the spoils of office as unusual offensive; condemn the appointment of incompetent Congressmen to the boards of ex-Union soldiers, and insist that the bill to pension soldiers of the Mexican war be passed.

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

Gen. Sypher, an ex-Congressman from Louisiana, has been in Washington for four days for his personal safety. He reluctantly to settle at some eight miles distant and told no one his name. A party was at once organized, and they returned to the scene of the outrage and found Plemouth sitting on Lucum block. He had killed himself with a shotgun. A grave was dug, and the remains of the unfortunate people were buried. The priest then opened the country for the nearest town, and found him in a small ravine several miles from the scene of his crime near the Cimarron River. A fractious horse was secured and saddled. One end of a long lariat was fastened around his neck, and the other securely was attached to the pommel of the saddle. The horse was then shot off, and amid the shouting of the men and cries of revolvers and rifles the frightened animal ran madly away. After a time of nearly two miles the lariat fell entangled and the lifeless body of the murderer was lassoed in a very ugly one. The land was almost covered with rocks and small trees, and the body was left behind. The body was left behind, and the priest recovered.

The Secretary of the Knights of Labor, Frederick S. Turner, appeared as a witness before the House select committee, at Washington, and testified that the Order was formerly an Orange Protestant Association of the Knights of Labor, but it was changed to a political organization. In these local assemblies there were from 10 to 5,000 members. The Knights of Labor had no political object, and did not seek to influence legislation. He had known of no such movement on their part. He knew nothing of the petitions to Congress for unlimited coinage purporting to come from Knights of Labor. He thought they could be traced to workmen outside of and unconnected with the Knights of Labor. Mr. Turner described the rules which he and his colleague, Mr. Hoeke, had had with Mr. Hoke in St. Louis. He said that Hoke's treatment of them was very discourteous; that he stated he would have no conversation with them as officers of the Knights of Labor, but that he would receive them as American citizens. They informed him that they did not desire to stand on their dignity, and were willing to talk with him as private citizens; that all they wanted was to have the Hoke and Power removed, and the men sent back to work. Mr. Turner said that the general organization had the right to keep, or to discharge, a delegate; that the men and strike had not been approved. The Work of the Senate and House of Representatives.

The President's messages on the labor question come up in the House on the 23d, and was referred to the Committee on Labor, with instructions to report on or before May 2. Mr. Cannon offered his resolution for the consideration of House upon the subject, but the pressure of other business, and the pressure of the bill gave rise to a lively debate, in which Mr. Hewitt attacked the President's message, and charged the Democrats with falling for the Presidential nomination. Mr. Randall defended the President. He declared that there was not a word in his message which was not in perfect harmony with party policy, and that it was one of men in the United States. The resolution was finally adopted, and the House then went into Committee of the Whole House, and authorized the issue of national bridge aid to the Cedar River, between Prescott Wis., and opposite Red Wing, Minn., and authorized the issue of Lake Superior, Ill., at least could Hiffle, Iowa, and Cedar Rapids, Iowa, Other Chic. THE JOURNAL.

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

Looks Like Fraud.

If one half of all the stories and reports are true, there is to be perpetrated at Boyne City to-day one of the most dastardly outrages on the people of this county that we have heard of since the notorious steal of the presidency in 1876.

On April 6th an unofficial announcement of the vote on the county seat question from every township in the county gave a majority against removal of about sixty. That result was conceded by both newspapers which had fought so fiercely for Boyne City, and by every man in the county. It was reviewed by Supervisor Jersey, chairman of the election board, who is now in the west prospecting for a location for business, having repeatedly expressed his opinion that this was the last canvass, and that if not carried this time it was forever hopeless. The vote of Evangeline township as then announced was 683 for removal and 2 against, as has been stated to us personally by more than one Boyne City man who was present when the vote was announced. That was the vote of that township as announced by the supervisor on the night of election, as telephoned to all parts of the county, and as published in the Statesman. Now, we understand the official return to be made to-day will place the number about 100 higher,—580 for removal, and 2 against, thus giving in the totals a majority for removal of about forty.

We understand that those in the secret claim that the unofficial report was misrepresented for a purpose, but their actions and language have not been consistent with the claim. If the corrected return could have shown, the next day, a majority of even one vote for Boyne City, they would have announced it with cannon and bonfires, and the newspapers would have prefaced their double-leaded announcements with all the poultry cuts they had in the office. Every man of them would have been loud in his demands for justice and right, and would have insisted that every vote cast was legal and honest. Instead of this there has been a tacit admission of fraud and illegal voting in various ways. They have apparently hoped for something to transpire which would reverse the result. Through the boldness and daring of a few, their fondest hopes are likely to be realized.

They say that no court since the decision of the famous "5 to 7" will go behind the returns, and that if the returns show a majority in favor of Boyne City, that will settle the matter forever.

Dare they do it? Is it possible that any election board will deceive itself and the people by making a false report of the ballot? Or, if they did not make a false report on the night of election, will they perjure themselves and face the penitentiary by making a false return and swearing to it now?

Will the board of supervisors dare sanction such bare-faced fraud as this (if it be true) by affirming the return and ordering the removal of the records? If they do, we mistake the temper of the people if it is quietly submitted to.

There is a future for some of the chief actors in this matter, and they will find the past not so easily forgotten.

Notes and News.

In the course of a recent interview in New York, Mr. L. M. Weston, of Grand Rapids, Mich., discussed the republican opposition to O. W. Powers as follows: "If the republican senate committee on judiciary was so much in earnest in its opposition to polygamy as the president is, they would not have refused to report favorably on O. W. Powers for justice of the supreme court of Utah, for he has the courage and ability to make it warm for the twin relic, if he had been given the opportunity."

Yesterday morning a sailor engaged in scraping the fore-topmast of the schooner Saveland slipped from the board on which he was suspended and dropped into the water, a distance of 150 feet. The force of fall was to some extent arrested by his striking the yard arm, which rested against the mast in a slanting position. The position of the yard was the means of diverting his course downward so that he fell over the rail instead of on the hard deck. He came out of the water uninjured. His companions regarded his escape as little less than miraculous.—Free Press

A REVERIE BY MOONLIGHT.

BY SUTTON HORNE.

The world is wrapped in calm repose,
And light gets on her sable gown,
The moon above the hills is rose,
And twinkling stars are shining down.

The air is balmy with perfume,
And on the breeze sweet odors blow
Of flowers that on the hillside bloom,
And in the world dells below.

The cricket chirps within his cell,
The bell-frog sends his note of cheer,
The firefly lights his lamp of hope,
The night-owl screams from out the oak.

The sleepy bird thinks in the fold,
The cows within the meadow lie,
The watch-dog barks a warning bold
As some belated wanderer goes by.

The gentle zephyrs kiss my brow
And drive away all thoughts of care;
My life is free from trouble now,
And peace and rest reign there.

A lady stroll around our cities
As the night doses about our close;
Great joy and happiness it brings,
And life set sail with sweet repose.

The birds of calm and silent rest
Develop now their strongest notes;
The sons of toil are sweetly blest
With happy dreams of joy and mirth.

Oh, what a blessing is the night!
That sooth'ng balm on troubled brow,
It heals the wound of care and strife,
And calls to peace our weary cares.

In Dreamland's sudding, kind embrace
We sleep the peaceful hours away,
And wake to life and busy toil
With night become a golden day.

And when life's sentence sounds in time,
And we no more see day's bright beams,
May I be laid to rest in peace
Will sleep the sleep of happy dreams.

BLIGHTED HOPES.

Mark saw the paragraph before I did. I wondered, to-day, looking back, if I could have controlled myself sufficiently to prepare him for the shock if I had read the newspaper first. I was passing Mark's cup of coffee to Janie, the servant, when I caught sight of his face. It was white and rigid, and his eyes were dilated in a story horrible to me.

"Mark?" I cried, in terror. "What is it, dear? Are you ill?"

I was beside him as I spoke, and saw that his eyes were fixed on a certain place in the paper he had been reading. Then I, too, read the fatal paragraph, only a few lines, but full of horror for Mark.

"Do not blame me," he said, in a whisper, shuddering as he spoke. "Oh, Bessie, Bessie, my heart is broken!"

I put my arms around him, and drew his head down upon my breast, where it had so often lain in childhood, when my orphaned brother came to seek Bessie to be comforted in boyish woes. He was my only brother, though I was sixteen years the eldest. Little graves in the cemetery marked the sorrows of my childhood, and one after another my brothers and sisters had drooped and died, until only Mark was left. And he was but four years old when our parents fell dead.

We were not poor, owning our own handsome home, and a comfortable income; so Mark had every advantage of education, and all the love, and had gradually won his way to a position in his profession. And I had married, lost my husband, and returned after an absence of only three short months, to resume my place in my brother's housekeeper.

It was just after Mark had finished his studies, and had been admitted to the bar, that he met Alice Arnold. She had come to Claymont to visit her aunt, a near neighbor and an old friend of ours, and we called to welcome her among us. She was about eighteen years old then, and her beauty was its way to my heart as surely as it fell to Mark's. She was the most timid, gentle creature I ever saw, her color flitting if you spoke to her, her sky blue eyes drooping, and her voice low and almost plaintive in its timidity. Miss Arnold, a strong, energetic old maid, seemed actually to worship her to her sister, irksome manner, but she clung to me from the first hour of our friendship.

Children generally like me, and she was little more than a child. Yet when she became more intimate, and came often to pass whole days with me, I found that behind the frightened, timid manner there was a clear brain, an intellect that had been carefully cultivated, and a sweet, womanly nature. She was an enthusiastic musician and a fine pianist, but could not sing. Nothing delighted her more than to play for Mark and myself, to sing duets, or, if I was tired or busy, to hear Mark sing, in his rich baritone voice, the music he loved.

I asked myself, after she had ended her manœuvres, if she was a coquette, a cruel, heartless flirt, who would win a man's heart only to cast it aside. And, in my bitterness though I thought she was. In later years I sympathized her of the crime. I believe she had no suspicion that Mark loved her. He was always grave and reserved, and, although he was but twenty-three at this time, had the air and bearing of a much older man. And I being really as much her senior, I think Alice looked upon us both as rather elderly people, and was far more free and confidential than she would have been if she looked upon Mark as a young man and a lover.

But Mark, who had never cared before for any of our girl friends, gave to Alice Arnold all the store of love his heart could ever offer. I knew it, for Mark had made me his confidential friend all his life, and seeing by shy glances in his presence, the interest she took in his pursuits, her gentle acceptance of his grave attentions, I thought his love was returned, and was happy in the expectation of a nearer, closer tie between the sweet, loving girl and myself.

But, just before she left Claymont, Mark, telling her his love, was answered by the tidings that she was engaged to be married. She was deeply distressed, coming to me to sob out her regret that Mark loved her, but loyally asserting her own love for her betrothed. After she had left us, Miss Arnold took me into confidence.

She told me that her sister was an heiress, and her mother was a fool. I am quoting Miss Arnold. She said that Henry Parker, the man who had won Alice's childish love, was a showy, heartless fellow of whom the family knew nothing, but who was distracted by all of them excepting the mother, who should have been the girl's protector, but was completely fascinated by the lover's attentions to herself.

Mark said but little to me, but I knew that he suffered keenly. He made some inquiries in the city about Henry Parker, and was convinced that he was an adventurer. I think my brother could have borne his own burden better if Alice had chosen a man worthy of her love, but he feared for her future happiness, thinking her betrothed had dazzled her imagination, rather than won her heart.

When we received cards for the wedding I thought of refusing to attend, but Mark decided to go, and we sent our wedding gift, and went up to town to be at the ceremony in the church, and the wedding breakfast afterward. I could not wonder when I saw Henry Parker that he had won Alice's love. He was superbly handsome, and had the winning manner calculated to change her timidity into a trusting love.

And he took the love and the trust to betray both, to change the love to a shuddering horror, the confiding trust to a shrinking fear. Little by little the poor girl roused to the fact that her husband despised the very gentleness he had so often praised, and that the charm of a full purse was the one that had attracted him to his wife. Probably a father or a guardian would have protected Alice's fortune after marriage, but it was in her own control, her mother being her only guardian. And Henry Parker spent it freely, at first in a profuse style of living, in luxuries his wife could share, but later in gambling and low vice, travelling the downward path with fearful rapidity.

Six years after his marriage he deserted his wife, who returned to her mother, and a year later the newspapers gave her the account of his death in a continental gambling-room, where he was shot in a quarrel.

It was after a year of widowhood that Alice Parker commenced some to blow her sweet face pale and sad, and her blue eyes often dreamy and tearful. She was but little changed, though older and graver than in her girlhood.

The long bright summer passed happily, and in September Alice was to return to her mother to prepare for a quiet wedding.

My brother was to be the happy man at last.

It was the evening before she was to leave us that Alice Arnold invited Mark and myself to tea. We were all in the sitting-room early in the evening, when a gentleman asked for Mrs. Parker, and Alice turned very white as she introduced Mr. George Parker.

"My husband's brother," she said, aside to me. "He was always very kind to me."

For a few moments after his introduction Mr. Parker sat in embarrassed silence. Then he said, very suddenly, "I do not know whether my news will be good news or bad news to you, Allie. I come to tell you, as soon as possible after hearing it myself, that Harry is not dead."

Alice did not faint or scream. White as death, she said, steadily, "Why did he conceal it from me?"

"He did not intentionally. He was left for dead, and afterward taken to a hospital, but as he got better in other ways, the doctors found his brain was weakened. He was sent to an insane asylum, and it was only two weeks ago that he recovered his sanity enough to send for me. I went to him at once, and brought him to my home. He is strong and well, and asks for you to go to him."

"Yes, I shall go to mother's to-morrow," Alice said. "Will you bring him to me?"

There seemed no question of her going to her poor lost, but the hopeless misery of her face was heart-breaking to witness. Mr. Parker left in time for an early train to town, and Alice Arnold took me to her own room to look at some lace.

"Let them be alone," she said to me. "It is for the last time. I know Alice. Under that shrinking, gentle manner there is a strong martyr spirit, and she will do her duty at any cost. Oh, the poor child! the poor child!"

And we broke into bitter weeping together, for as deeply as she grieved for Alice did I grieve for my brother.

I did not see Alice again. Mark met me in the hall, and saying to Miss Arnold, "Go into the—comfort her if you can," he drew my hand through his arm and led me out of the house.

That was just one week ago. To-day we read in the local paper this paragraph:

"Mrs. Henry Parker, residing at 232——street, N. W., was found dead in her room from the effects of an overdose of chloral. The dose was probably taken accidentally, as Mrs. Parker had been suffering from insomnia, and using chloral to produce sleep."

Mark is broken in his young, manly prime; dare not intrude upon him, or ask the cause of his death. Was the overdose taken by accident, or in a moment of utter despair?

LIFE UNDER WATER.

An Old Engineer Relates Some of His Experiences.

"Life under water monotonous, eh? Well, I guess not. At least I don't find it so. I've been there fourteen years, off and on, and have always managed to find enough to occupy my time and attention." The speaker was an engineer on one of the great ocean steamers, and as he made that remark in New York I squeezed a little nearer to the pier before his vessel, he remarked his boss blows with an awkward jerk and gave his head a resident twitch.

"A fellow needn't let time lag on him anywhere if he only has his eyes open," he added. "Now, to some it would seem almost unbearable to watch the continuous throb of the machinery of a large steamer and hear nothing but the everlasting 'click, click,' of the piston rods and levers, but to me it plays usual like music. I've become partly dulled and insensible to them, but even now I often sit still and watch and listen to their never-varying beats with that sort of satisfaction which a musician feels when he runs his fingers mechanically over the keys of his instrument. His satisfaction comes from the fact that he has his instrument out of order under his control, and mine comes from a similar cause. With a touch of my finger I could pump thousands of tons at almost any speed through the water, or send a hundred lives into eternity. Indeed, I feel that I am the sole responsible party on board for the lives of my passengers as it remains with me to keep my machinery in such perfect condition as to withstand any ordinary sea or storm.

"And again, I take pride in keeping everything around me shining like burnished gold. If a spot of grease or dirt gets on the rods or handles of my part of the machinery it cannot escape my notice long. I go over every part of the engine twice a day, and rub the irons and steel rods with as much pleasure as though I owned the engine myself. I sometimes amuse myself in keeping a recorded the number of miles we run an hour and comparing it with the records of previous trips. I have on a book in the engine-room a curious table of dates and figures, which shows the time we made on each trip, and is made by different steamers. I have counted across the ocean for the last fourteen years. If anything more than usual occurs I jot it down opposite the date, and so make a sort of diary of it. It speaks volumes to me, and recalls many interesting incidents. For instance, I was looking through it the other day, and I found opposite June 10, 1875, a reference to a visit from Queen Victoria. The incident was related to my mind in a moment, and I felt as heartily over it myself. This is what I mean, when I say that life in a place we were visited by several thousand people, and we have had royalty on ship. They were an ignorant set, and had never seen any machinery worked by steam. The captain was a jovial old fellow, and allowed them to come into the engine-room, and they expressed some doubts as to the advisability of so doing. They were very timid, and it took some time for me to convince them that the machinery was harmless. Finally I got two of them to come close to the heavy driving-rod, which you can see on a large vessel is an enormous piece of iron. Suddenly, without warning, it gave a start forward, and, accompanied by a short sharp sound, jerked fully ten feet above our heads. Angry at my assault, they began to fling on steam without my knowledge. I turned to speak to him when my attention was attracted in the other direction. The last two Chinamen of the party were making frantic endeavors to jump up half a dozen steps at a time. The rest had disappeared, and before I could get on deck the frightened crowd had got into their boat and started for the shore. No amount of persuasion could ever get them to return to that ship, which they claimed was alive. It was a mean trick, but it has afforded me many a good laugh since."

The Agreeableiest.

The Swedenborgian theory that each person has his "sphere," which is perceived as an effect of whose cause one is ignorant, is a theory quite borne out by experimental experience. Our likes and dislikes are very largely founded on matters as intangible as were the moons of Dr. Ayre. Nowhere is the truth so strongly felt as when receiving a guest in letter-tete is one's own apartment. The friend who is what the Italians call sim pattica, a quality for which there is no English equivalent, is the rarest of blessings. One does not expect this of the friends of long-tried friends who may yet be very estimable, and to whom one warmly regarded by the hostess. But there is a type of woman who is the most disagreeable of guests, and from whom one turns away instinctively without being able to give any very tangible reason why. Out of sight she may not be altogether out of mind, nor by any means outside the circle of one's friendly wishes for her best prosperity and enjoyment. But in her presence she is an irritating and jarring force. It is the woman who is so crude and obtuse by nature that she does not even know she is crude; the woman to whom the fine art of conversation is as unknown as is the sculptor's power to the stone-mason; the woman who goes rough-shod over all your preferences and tendencies, and is so crude that she never dreams wherein her rudeness lies. Her conversation consists largely in a series of direct questions, and of the most inappropriate conclusions drawn from the answers she forces from you. Her presence is like a material weight in the atmosphere, and on her departure you are ready to ring the joy bells of relief. In delightful contrast is the agreeable guest, the woman whose civilization is so fine that it invests her at with an atmosphere; whose conversation is that of subtle art, so suggestive, so stimulating, that it opens a vista of all high and delightful possibilities. Coming upon her you are embarrassed not with conventional remarks of wind, or weather, or social non sequiturs, but with some fine thought suggested at the moment. Perhaps you have had an experience of this kind you will never lose out of your life. You had called on a lady whose parlor was in the hands of the decorators, and whose paintings and bric-a-brac were, for the time, removed, with one exception. On the mantel rested a fine French photograph of Millet's picture of the earth—a stretch of level land, the sun sinking below the horizon, and in the foreground a shepherd with his flock. The picture is new to you, and in reply to a word of comment the hostess expresses her recognition of the subtle poetical meaning portrayed in the work, and you go out from your call refreshed, uplifted. It was only a photograph of Millet's picture of the new vistas. Such friends are a gift of the gods, and such experiences are among the enchanting influences of life.—Western Traveler.

Punctiliousness.

If one were required to sum up in a single word the most infallible and invariable evidence of good-breeding, he could do better than to say "punctiliousness;" and even should he be furnished with the same that to be punctilious is as characteristic of the martinet as of the gentleman, he need not therefore be shaken from his position. Exactitude is a thing which is passed only by inheritance, or at least by training from the cradle, and it is a just appreciation of the comparative value of trifles that breeding, no less than genius, is manifest. It is the poor who insist on little things to be beneath money, and who disregards conventionalities with a scorn he mistakes manliness and breadth, but which is in reality unconscious and ignorance. It is astonishing how many people in what prides itself upon being the best society are lacking in punctiliousness. Of course everybody replies to invitations, acknowledges courtesies, sends a word of congratulation or of holiday gifts and flowers, because people who are ill-bred enough to neglect these others would be ill-bred enough to neglect these, and so make a sort of classy of it. It speaks volumes to me, and recalls many interesting instances. For instance, I was looking through it the other day, and I found opposite June 10, 1875, a reference to a visit from Queen Victoria. The incident was related to my mind in a moment, and I felt as heartily over it myself. This is what I mean, when I say that life in a place we were visited by several thousand people, and we have had royalty on ship. They were an ignorant set, and had never seen any machinery worked by steam. The captain was a jovial old fellow, and allowed them to come into the engine-room, and they expressed some doubts as to the advisability of so doing. They were very timid, and it took some time for me to convince them that the machinery was harmless. Finally I got two of them to come close to the heavy driving-rod, which you can see on a large vessel is an enormous piece of iron. Suddenly, without warning, it gave a start forward, and, accompanied by a short sharp sound, jerked fully ten feet above our heads. Angry at my assault, they began to fling on steam without my knowledge. I turned to speak to him when my attention was attracted in the other direction. The last two Chinamen of the party were making frantic endeavors to jump up half a dozen steps at a time. The rest had disappeared, and before I could get on deck the frightened crowd had got into their boat and started for the shore. No amount of persuasion could ever get them to return to that ship, which they claimed was alive. It was a mean trick, but it has afforded me many a good laugh since."

Gough's Tribute to Water.

A Worcester, O., correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial Gazette writes. Of all the powerful excertations on rum delivered by the late John B. Gough, the most powerful ins never been published. I came across it today. It is in Gough's own handwriting and was delivered by him twenty-six years ago. After its delivery a young law student in the audience, Mr. E. S. Shepard, now a president of this city, asked the lecturer for his words in writing. Mr. Gough consented on condition that the manuscript should never be published while he was on the lecture platform. The conditions were assented to, and Mr. Gough jotted down the following apostrophe on water and excerpted on rum as he had delivered them while holding a glass of water in his hand:

"There is no poison in that cup; no fiendish spirit dwells beneath those crystal drops to lure you and me and all of us to ruin; no spectral shadows play upon its waveless surface; no widow's groans or orphan's tears rise to God from those pinned fountains; misery, crime, wretchedness, woe, want, and rage come not within the hallowed precincts where cold water reigns supreme. Pure now as when it fell in the native heaven, giving vigor to our youth, strength to our manhood, and solace to our old age. Cold water is beautiful and bright and pure everywhere. In the moonlight fountains and the sunny rills in the warbling brook and the giant river; in the deep, tangled wildwood and the cataract's spray; in the hand of beauty or on the lips of manhood cold water is beautiful everywhere.

Now follows the execration on rum: "Rum! There is a poison in that cup. There is a serpent in that cup whose sting is madness and whose embraces is death. There dwells beneath that shining surface a fiendish spirit which for centuries has been wandering over the earth, carrying in war of desolation and destruction against man and blighting and withering the noblest affections of the heart and corrupting with its foul breath the life of human life and blasting the good, green earth ruin of intellect noble. Gaze on it! But shudder as you gaze! These sparkling drops are murder in disguise; so quiet now, yet widows groans and orphans tears and manhood's wails are in that cup. The worm that dieth not and the fire that is not quenched are in that cup.

"Come and large and look and truth dwell not within that fiery circle where dwells that desolating monster whom men call rum. Corrupt now as when it left its native hell, giving rise to hate, madness to the brain and ruin to soul. Rum is vile and deadly and accursed everywhere. The poet would liken it in its fiery glow to the flames that flicker around the abode of the damned. The theologian would point you to the drunkard's doom, while the historian would unfold the dark record of the past and point you to the fate of empires and kingdoms hired to ruin by the sorcery sing of the temptier, and sloping now in cold obscurity, the wrecks of what once were great, grand and opinions. Yes, rum is corrupt and vile and deadly accursed everywhere. Of type and semblance of all earthly corruption.

"Rose are those yet as when the wise man wrote as of the power and baleful as dee thy enchantment. Vile not than yet as when thou first went on thy unholy mission—filling earth with desolation and madness, woe and anguish. Deadly art thou yet as when thy envenomed tooth first took fast hold on human hearts, and thy secret tongue first drank up the warm life blood of immortal souls. Accursed art thou yet as when the lames of the first victim rotted in a dung grave, and its shriek echoed along the glooms empyreal of hell. Yes, thou infernal spirit of rum, though all past time lost than been, as though all existing time than shall be, seemed accursed with rum.

"In the fiery fountains of the still; in the roaring brothers of the crackers; in the Eagle's palace and the drunkard's house; in the rich man's cellar and the poor man's closet; in the festibulum vapor of foul dens, and in the place of gilded saloons; in the midst of poverty and on the lips of manhood—rum is vile and deadly and accursed everywhere.

"Rum, we yield not to thy unhallowed influence, and together we have met to plan thy destruction. And by what new name shall we call thee and of what shall we call thee when we speak of thy attributes. Others may call thee the child of perdition, the base born progeny of sin and satan, the murderer of manhood and the destroyer of human souls; but I think we might give thee with a new name among men and crown thee with a new horror, and that new name shall be the sacramental cup of the rum sellers. Yes, rum is corrupt and vile and deadly accursed everywhere.

"Ye sons and daughters of earth—Dash it down! And then, rum, shall be my text in my pilgrimage among men, and not alone shall my tongue utter it, but the groans of orphans in their agony and the cries of widows in their desolation shall proclaim it the enemy of home the traitor of childhood and the destroyer of manhood, and whose only antidote is the sacramental cup of temperance—cold water!

One of the walls in the Brackett Block, at Minneapolis, Minn., collapsed, killing a number of workmen, four of whom were killed, and seven others dangerously injured.

The famous colt Rapido, of the Ballinas stud of California, earlier, died of hoof fever while being brought East by rail.

Engineers of the Central Missouri road are taking soundings for the piers of a Mississippi bridge at Albany, Illinois.

The Coroner's inquest at Chicago on the body of Policeman Degan, killed by the explosion of the Nihilist bomb, resulted in holding August and Chris Spies and Michael Schwab of the Arbeiter Zeitung, and Samuel Fielden for murder, and a recommendation was made that A. R. Parsons be arrested and held for trial on the same charge. The negro wife of the latter was captured and confined in the Central Station. The office of the Arbeiter Zeitung, the Nihilist organ, was closed by the police, the type of an incendiary proclamation confiscated, and twenty-five printers connected with the concern were committed for outrage. The guns in two socialist armories were taken to police headquarters. The most serious disturbance of the day occurred at the corner of Eighteenth street and Center avenue, where a drug store and saloon were wrecked by a mob of Bohemians, seven of whom were captured. Officers of the St. Paul and East Wayne Lodge obtained warrants for the arrest of four men who delayed a train at the Madison street viaduct, and one of the number was put in irons by Marshal Hesse. The Bohemians, at their mass meeting, sent to Chief Elwood a check for $10,750 for the relief of the wounded policemen, and an equal amount was subscribed by members of the Board of Trade. The chief strike of the day occurred at the Deering Harvester Factory, on the northern boundary line of the city, where 1,784 men had each become an advance in wages was refused. There are under treatment at the Cook County Hospital twenty-seven police officers and twenty-nine men arrested as socialists. During the day Officer Michael Maddigan received a sabre wound in the Desplaines street station, and attempted to barter it to John Lutscharski, who had just fired a pistol in the air. The prisoner on reaching the door slug Madden through the lungs, and the officer retaliated by sending a ball into the others head and another into his groin. Both were taken to the hospital mortally wounded. Slavo Harrison caused a sensation this morning, people in a state of house in places of business, and ordering the dispersal of any large bodies of persons. The striking freight handlers, at a public meeting, expressed their abhorrence of the murderous methods adopted by the Socialists.

A serious conflict between the militia and a crowd of strikers occurred at Milwaukee on the morning of the 5th inst. A vast crowd of Polish Socialists marched from St. Stanislaus Church to the Bay View rolling mills. They refused to yield to orders to halt, and were given a volley of bullets. Four men were killed and four others dangerously wounded. The shooting had a terrible effect on the men. Seeing several of their number fall, wounded or killed, they threw themselves flat on the ground, and sought the shelter of the railroad embankment. The level of South Bay street and Lincoln avenue, being higher than the march, was also sought by the frantic men, who tumbled headlong into the water. There was every evidence of premeditation on the part of the militia but fired low, and "with intent to kill" on one of them expressed it. Two thousand Socialists congregated at Milwaukee Garden, and listened to harangues by the leaders in the afternoon. The Star anarchic conspirators were said to be same several times, and the outrage became the subject of Most's Paul Grottkau, the socialist leader and publisher of the Arbeiter Zeitung, was arrested.

SOUTHERN.

At Judsonia, Arkansas, many horses and cattle have been stolen to death by mad dog hydrophobia.

Memphis dispatches state that the floods in the South along the Mississippi showed signs of abatement, but reports showed that plantations on both sides of the river had been overflowed already, and the crops destroyed. The levees in the vicinity of Helena, Arkansas, were patrolled day and night to prevent the crevasse cutting loose through them.

Gov. Larrabee of Iowa has issued a proclamation relative to the enforcement of the prohibitory law. He calls earnestly upon all temperance societies and other bodies organized for kindred purposes to exercise more energy in assisting the enforcement of the law. Priests, ministers, teachers, and the press are especially urged to aid fully and efficiently in the moral forces of the State in the cause. He says: "Let the judges, attorneys, and officers of the courts be painstaking and persistent in enforcing the law, both in letter and in spirit. Let the Sheriffs and peace officers be fearless and vigilant, and let the Mayors and all other municipal officers awaken to new zeal in their efforts to secure the observance. I exhort all citizens to lay aside partisan differences and by determined efforts banish the drunkards from home."

Thirteen persons employed in the Chicago Custom House in 1884 sok to be paid $1,400 for working over eight hours per day. Twenty-two messengers, at twenty dollars each, were also paid for the same work. Chicago advices of Friday thus outline the industrial situation in that city:

Some of the smaller shops, where less machines and metal workers are employed, have given the men what they asked for, but in the case of the larger employers, the Iron Founders are still standing out. The wood-workers have signed seven eight-hour, and without strikes. The bakers have battered their employers down to a ten hour day, full pay, and abolished hours of work. The furniture workers have signed, or are signing, a new scale, the concession being either equal a raise or graduation of time-frames. At the McCormick works there are now working an average of 1 per cent in wages. There are 3,000 men at work in the shops of the Illinois Central, Lake Shore, Pittsburg, Cleveland, and Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific roads, and 1,000 more are expected back in a few days. The Eight-hour League will try to induce them. The freight handlers' strike seems to be broken. The men have expressed a desire to return to their rooms. The brickyards are working, the owners having compromised the differences between the men and employers. There are no strikes at the principal Chicago building works. The employers at the Stockyards have not yet succeeded in ending the strike. Three of the packing establishments in so presented seen. The butchers are trying to have Sunday work done away with, but are not striking. Every organ-ization in the city is with the men, and all count on strikes. The planing mills have started up with a few men, and have shut down on their men, whom they are refusing to take back charging. At the map works of Rand & Co. the employers have obtained a full force, and a large percentage many of the striking engraved men, and they have for the present given up the eight-hour movement when the present strikes are settled.

Major W. P. Green, one of the leading citizens of Louisiana, was killed by a laborer on the Gonzales plantation, after an exchange of blows and shots. The citizens of the parish took the negro from jail and hanged him to a tree.

In the case of J. T. Cluverius, convicted at Richmond, Va., of the murder of Fanny Lillian Madison, the Supreme Court of Appeals has decided against the prisoner, finally sustaining the judgment of the lower court. Unless the Governor interferes Cluverius will be hanged.

The House Ways and Means Committee has decided to report a bill making the free import of the tassel proved on raw Oregons for the free admission of certain blocks of marble presented for the city park by the Government of Mexico.

About twenty tons of giant powder are used weekly in the Menominee range mines in Wisconsin. As the Northwestern Road will no longer transport the article, local prices are to be elevated.

The existing labor troubles were a topic of discussion at the Cabinet meeting on Thursday, in the course of which the riots in Chicago and Milwaukee and elsewhere were referred to, with a view of taking such precautionary measures for the protection of Government property as may be found necessary.

A BILL was introduced yesterday in the Senate on the 6th inst. to apply to better carriers the provisions of the act to provide for the punishment of assaulting letter carriers, and making such assault a felony. The bill provides that the Attorney General, the Solicitor General, the Associate Justice of the Supreme Court, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Postmaster General, and the Secretary of War, or any two of them, may, after a simple formal notice, by a vote, fix the rate of wages to be paid to laborers and mechanics.

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

The machinery manufacturers of Chicago contemplate closing their places of business until the employes will agree to accept ten hours' pay for ten hours' work. Chicago advices of Friday thus outline the industrial situation in that city:

SHORTER WORKING HOURS.

Progress of the Great Movement in the Cities Looking Toward That End.

Some Manufacturers Accede to the Demand, Others Refuse, and Others Are Waiting.

Outside of the city of Chicago the movement for the eight-hour system for the solution of the working right hours a day labor was not so general as the agitation of the subject. The following is a summary of what occurred in the principal and in only one city—Milwaukee—has the movement met with any complaints. In that city the demands of the laborers progressed, and 3,000 of them struck. The demands included the drivers, and the excursion of the English-speaking race is with the home rule movement. He says that they must not be discouraged if, in the upper ranks of society at home, they hear a variety of discordant notes, and continues:

QUESTIONS: You have before you a Cabinet determined to do process and with no delight in place of its own. I see very little chance of the Home Rule movement being lost in the twilight. I will not proceed to enumerate the state of things within and without Parliament and I will only adopt the phrase of the next great step to be taken for the progress of my cause as effectuating the immediate, excitable multitude. The land question bill is already on the decline, and I am sure that the Irish people will not be deceived by it. I am not at all the worse for thought that the excitement had been exaggerated. Nothing was to be trusted a doubt, to follow, exclaimed, pointing to the buildings of the Merchants' Association, "Do you see that bastile of monopoly? Now is the time for you to arrest it from the grasping hands of those." The crowd at once up on opposing hotel and immediately leveled the building, and the image to disappear themselves on the way with bricks and sticks. Soon they reached the big gate, the workmen were just emerging from it. They were greeted with yells of "Scab" and "Rats," and hemmed with shouts. The scattered work men fled, a hasty retreat, but the mob followed them into the yard. The men were stoned and every window in the mill was demolished. When the police arrived they were pelted with stones and fired upon. Two hundred officers were rushed to the scene, fast as horses could draw the patrol wagons, and a short, sharp fight followed between the mob and the rabble followed. A number of the mob were shot, but were carried away by their friends, so that their names might not be obtained. A dozen policemen were hurt. The officers finally succeeded in driving the crowd off. A crowd of about 2,000 striking men and women marched to the Cornell Brothers, in River street, but were forbidden by the police. The butchers employed by Swift & Co. at the Stock Yards were forced by a mob to quit work. The employes of the railways met at the Burlington offices and resolved to act as a mob in refusing all demands for higher wages or shorter hours. The men were in Armour's packing-house are to receive ten hours' pay for eight hours' work. Cabinet makers who had struck for eight hours' work, and had been out for two weeks, have accepted the terms of their employers, namely, ten hours' work for nine hours' pay. The men who had struck for an advance of one cent. The Chicago railroads were on a strike for better wages and hours.

New York.

Almost every branch of labor in New York is now or has been threatened the determination of the men to obtain a reduction in the length of working day. As a general rule the demand for nine hours for days in the week and eight hours on Saturday has been conceded by the employers with little or no demur, but there is still a great deal of discontent among the different trades, to the granting of the eight-hour day.

Pittsburgh.

At Pittsburgh about 5,000 men are on strike. The plasterers ask for nine hours' work, and the carpenters, in the different trades, to the granting of the eight-hour day.

Gladstone Issues a Manifesto to His Midlothian Constituents for Home-Rule Indorsement.

He Argues His Position Broadly, Claiming the Opposition Encourages Wealth and Social Influence.

Mr. Gladstone has issued a manifesto to his Midlothian constituents, in which, after explaining that his age and desire to preserve his strength for the coming contest in Parliament has prevented him from taking part in the Easter recess campaign he refers to the messages received by him from such capitals as Washington, Boston, and Quebec as proving that the sympathy of the English-speaking race is with the home rule movement. Battle Between Police and Strikers—Several Wounded—The Gould Strike Ended—Labor Notes

Serious Riot in Chicago.

A very serious outbreak in connection with the labor troubles in Chicago occurred at the great McCormick Reaper Factory on the afternoon of the 3d inst. About 7,000 strikers gathered in some one in his near the works. They consisted largely of employes of lumber yards and planing mills. Most of the men were Germans, Bohemians, and Poles. A rather "tough" looking individual addressed the crowd from an empty beer keg in German, and other speakers delivered harangues in Bohemian and Polish. All speeches were of an inflammatory character, such as the Anarchists delight to indulge in. Their words did not fail to have an effectuous the immediate, excitable multitude, many of whom were under the influence of liquor. When Mr. Anarchist leaders thought that the excitement had been sufficiently worked up, they ordered a march to the McCormick works. The men followed, yelling and howling like demons. When they arrived at the factory they were greeted with a shower of stones and brickbats. The men had evidently been expecting this, for they were prepared with guns and revolvers. They began firing at the mob, and the mob began firing back with stones and brickbats. The men in Armour's packing-house are to receive ten hours' pay for eight hours' work. Cabinet makers who had struck for eight hours' work, and had been out for two weeks, have accepted the terms of their employers, namely, ten hours' work for nine hours' pay. DYNAMITE IN CHICAGO.

An Organized Attack by Criminal and Vicious Men Against Life and Property.

Anarchists and Socialists Execute a Deeply-Laid Plan to Destroy and Kill.

Fifty Policemen Wounded, Many of Them Fatally—Many of the Mob Slain.

Bloody Scenes Almost Rivaling the Paris Commune in the Streets of Chicago.

The result of the nefarious and incendiary doctrines which have been for several years preached in the streets and halls of Chicago by alien and criminal agitators, says a Chicago paper of Wednesday, was seen last night, when a dynamite bomb was thrown into the midst of a squad of policemen who were performing their season duty, and sixty of them were dangerously wounded, some fatally. Theft was an organized and premeditated attack. Anarchists of no doubt, and the outgrowth of the recent Mc'Cormick trouble, occurred on Monday, when some anarchists were most justly punished for an attempt to destroy property. Monday's issue of that issue was spelled, the following circular was distributed on the street:

"Revenge! Workingmen, to arms! Your murderer, the police, has murdered in cold blood hundreds of your brothers in Mt. Mc'Cormick this afternoon. They killed the poor wretches because they, like you, had the courage to demand the supreme gift of your bosses. They killed them because they dared to ask for a shorter day of the bosses of hell. They killed them to satisfy the greed of your masters. Your duty is to satisfied and contented with whatever your masters condescend to allow you, or you will get killed.

"You have for years endured the most abject submission to the police. Your patience has been unmeasurable imposition. You have allowed your sisters to death; you have endured the pangs of hunger and hunger your children you have sacrificed to the bankers' bonds; in short, you have been cowards and obedient slaves all these years. Why? To satisfy the insatiable greed, to satisfy the insatiable greed of your masters. Within the few days there were to be known the bonds like bloodhounds out to shed you, kill you!

"If you are men, if you are the sons of your grandsires, who have shed their blood for freedom, then you will flee in your might, Hecatombs, your oppressors, lay down your lives on the altar of your country. To arms! to arms! to arms!

"Vera Bastrunes."

Tuesday afternoon it was followed to the bulletin, which was thrown broadcast throughout the city, and read as follows:

"Workingmen, Workingmen! Great meeting tonight, at 7:30 o'clock, at the Haymarket, Haymarket, between Desplaines and Halsted. Good speakers will be present to demonstrate the latest outrage of the police, the shooting of our fellow workmen yesterday afternoon. Workingmen, come in your thousands!"

In response to this, a large crowd of Anarchists and socialists assembled at the point indicated, and were harangued by a trio of blatant communistic orators. The speeches were of an incendiary character. One, Samuel Fielden, a Lancashire man, said: "We must be men and not let our wives and children be murdered by our socialistic robbers to the law! Legislation will do us no good. Our friend, Carter Harrison, to Congress in the interest of labor, Carter Harrison, who has shot down women and children! Let us be men! Let us be men! When the rich man understands that it is not healthy to live among a lot of disembodied souls, he will be willing to get legislation and law before." Fielding continued in this strain until 10:30, at, when the police officers, left the Haymarket, and the crowd dispersed with no trouble. It was noticed that the final line of officers was ordered to halt opposite the saloon from which to work.

A thousand men had meanwhile gathered. The police had meanwhile gathered in force, headed by Inspector Bonfield and Capt. Ward, of the Eleventh Precinct, and ordered the crowd to move into side streets. The police succeeded into the crowd, sweeping it to the Desplaines street station. When the front ranks reached the speakers' wagon the crowd had thinned out to about 300.

Captain Ward ordered the speakers to the station of Illinois I commanded his crowd to disperse.

As the words left his mouth a splitting crash of the orders from the officers in the opening of the alley and over the speakers' wagon. The crowd scattered in all directions. The police were ordered to fire, and a volley in fell directly in the middle of the street, and wounded numbers. The exact number of police. The instant that it was thrown the crowd was in a panic. The police, twenty-one in all, fell twenty each, and the ground. The bomb broke the ranks of the officers. A galling gun could not save cut down the ranks. A second volley followed, the details of which may never be known. The police, wounded and unwounded, fired at the crowd, looking together in the street and stood their ground, officers fell after and with the crowd. Four men were killed on the fire. In an instant every man's revolver was in action, and every man shot to kill. For an instant after the explosion, the crowd seemed paralyzed, but the cries of the wounded men, and the battered a weakly drawn, and the battle raging in the air, the mob plunged away into the darkness with a yell of despair. Soon it was almost an indescribable scramble for the rear. The wounded were knocked down by those behind them, and trampled upon like cattle. The ground was strewn with hats, coats, and pieces were picked up on hands away. Those on the inner circle of the crowd were at least twenty by police, and were shot down. The police pursued the mob for half a block to the Desplaines street station, and arrested all who were overtaken by the wounded men down and clubbed. In a moment after the explosion the streets were empty, but within a radius of 100 feet of the spot where the bomb fell the Police fifty sixty men were wounded on the ground. The center of the street seemed full of men, and the sidewalks were crowded. Under the iron stairway on the northwest corner of the street two citizens lay, one insensible, the other moaning faintly and moving to time, down the basement stairway, underneath, there, with his face upon the cold stone floor, lay a man in a coma. Was a wounded man, and at his feet, on the sidewalk, a man was lying in the gutter. At the head of the basement stairway, a man was sitting, another sat up, leaning a blessing by and bending the officers not to be disturbed. Two men were lying in the middle of the street, one in the gutter, and in the doorway below, three more. East and west on Desplaines street, and west by to doorways. Within five minutes after the firing had ceased eight men lay in the alley, near the wagon, between Hand-lift and Lake streets. No citizens were hurt, but the police had carried off all the wounded men, and some minutes after the mob had dispersed the police kept a frenzied search for any who had taken refuge near by. Those who sort the officers returns were allowed to go, but all were attempted to be taken by force. Two were clubbed. The search for the wounded was promptly begun. Forty-eight policemen were found to be wounded, eight of them, it is feared, fatally. The injuries from the scene of the first period take Maddigan to the station, where he died in two hours. Officer Lynch was found in the gutter, bludgeoned and instantly occupied by breathless and horse-stricken crowds. Close to the rear of this terrified throng the wounded followed at the best speed their injuries would permit. Man ran at a staggering pace, with the blood streaming from his face, and fell fainting in the street. Another was seen to stagger and fall, and another ran a few paces and then fell. Couples and small groups came dragging a wounded friend whom they had the courage to rescue. Several fell fainting in the streets and were picked up by sympathetic men in the crowds.

He finds the only active ingredient in all that he analyzed is common salt, and his investigations go to prove what is generally known, namely, that salt water is better than fresh water for putting out fires.

—It is generally thought among those best informed that Congress will declare forfeited the unearned portion of a valuable land grant of the Marquette, Houghton & Ontonagon Railroad, says a special from Lansing. The earned portion has been sold to the Michigan Land and Iron Company. The last State Legislature extended the time for building the line of the road from L'Anse or Houghton to Ontonagon till July 4 of the present year, but the railroad company has not yet begun the grading for the extension. It would appear that the railroad officials care very little whether the grant is forfeited or not.

Toulmin over a year ago, by the Probate Court, has filed a petition asking that the guardian be removed. He claims that undue influence was brought to bear upon his wife when she filed the petition asking that a guardian be appointed, and that such action was without proper jurisdiction. Mr. Richmond claims to have prospered against the appointment of Toulmin, and set forth that a bond in the sum of $5,000 only was filed, when his interest in the firm amounted to at least $20,000.

—The directors of the Detroit Base-Ball Club have let upon a scheme by which they hope to avoid financial loss should any member of its team become disabled while traveling from one city to another. The accident insurance companies have heretofore strictly refused to assume any risk on professional ball-players, but exceptions have been made to members of the Detroits, and every member now has his life insured. The policy is made payable to the Treasurer of the Detroit Club. Should one of the players be injured while traveling, and compelled to abstain from playing, the club is to be paid an indemnity of $25 per week, and should he be killed the club will receive $5,000. The policy has no reference to injuries sustained in games.

—A remarkable funeral took place recently near Adrian. Last December Mr. and Mrs. S. D. Moore, a well-known couple of the neighborhood, celebrated their golden wedding. A few days ago Mrs. Moore died at the age of 71. Mr. Moore is an invalid, and refused to be present at the services of a minister of the Gospel. At the funeral ceremonies at the house the venerable husband read an extract from the "Journey of Life," by Philip Davy, M. D., which he followed with a sketch of the life of his departed companion, and then extended an invitation to any one to make remarks from a secular standpoint. The oldest daughter read a poem which she had prepared for the occasion, in which, however, she acknowledged a Heavenly Father, who "folds His loved ones in His arms, and calls them home." At the grave the husband simply and tenderly bade his wife farewell, closing by saying: "We are all of the earth, and must return to the earth again." The daughter, standing by her father, recited another verse, in which she frankly acknowledged God and the spirit land.

THE LABOR SITUATION.

The Great Movement of Wage-Workers for Shorter Hours of Labor.

The Situation Just on the Eve of the Great Battle—History of the Eight-Hour Agitation.

From the news of telegraphic dispatches to the metropolitan press on the morning of the 1st of May we glean the following summary of the industrial and labor situation of that date: At Chicago the eight-hour agitation had resulted in closing all the breweries and beer factories and in the suspension of work at most of the iron and lumber yards. The great army of meat-packers threatened to strike for shorter hours. Workmen in the lumber yards demanded the eight-hour concession and quit work for extra work. Freight handlers of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy and Chicago and Alton freight houses struck work in consequence of a refusal of the managers to adopt the eight-hour system. The workmen in different shops of the Illinois Central, Lake Shore, Rock Island and Pacific roads, to the number of 1,000 men, were also threatening strikes on the same ground. The demands made by the men were not uniform, nor were the answers of employers to the representatives of the Eight-hour League, the Furniture Manufacturers' Association at Grand Rapids, Mich., declared in favor of a reduction of the number of hours of labor to be exclusive of the time occupied in the noon hours, and to be paid to treat with employes only as individuals. The Wheelmen's Union, the company of Milwaukee, the largest establishment of the kind in the world, employing 225,000 wage-workers of Chicago have already replied by the eight-hour movement. Also allows the proposal to be set on strike the 1,000 men employed in the Pullman Palace Car Company's shops at Pullman, Illinois. Other conventions was not signed. The crew of ship men of Milwaukee had approximately lost an eight-hour should result, and arrangements had been made to secure an extend hundred special policemen. A New York dispatch of the 1st says:

In a circular issued by Bradstreet's as to the effect of the eight-hour movement upon the iron industry of the country, the report shows that the anxious inquiry has been made as to how far the demand for a reduction of working time has been granted. Information received from the principal iron and steel plants made by correspondents of the Bradstreet's shows that the demand for the introduction of nine-hour labor has been granted in the Pittsburgh district, and in the Southern States, as also in the Chicago district, and in the Northwest. THE COUNTY SEAT.

The board of supervisors have met and canvassed the vote on the removal of the county seat, accepting the certificate of Evangeline township as one hundred more votes than were reported on the night of election. The calling of the meeting at Boyne City instead of East Jordan, the canvass of the votes by a partisan committee with closed doors in stead of by an open board, the refusal of the clerk to permit members of the board to examine the certificates without permission from the prosecuting attorney, the appearance of bluff throughout the whole proceeding and many other things not necessary to mention here, serve to strengthen the suspicion of fraud. However, they have made their chain of plotting and planing so complete and carried it out so well, that if the courts do not order an investigation, and go beyond the canvass of the board to the poll lists and certificates of election from each township, then it will stand, and the records must be moved, and that place thereafter considered as the legal county seat.

If the courts permit this to stand, then our methods of election are a delusion and a snare. If a few men in a community can deceive their own townsmen, misrepresent their vote at the time of election, withhold the returns until such time as they choose to deliver them up, report them when they choose at a figure much higher than that first reported and conceded by their own townsmen who were witnesses of the count, hold over the canvass in such a manner that the canvassing board as a body do not know what the returns are from each and every township, and finally have it decided as legal, then we have no assurance whatever of a free vote and fair count.

We are not prepared to say that the parties in this transaction have committed perjury and perpetrated a great fraud upon the people of this county, but there is a great deal to substantiate such belief.

An attempt will be made to have the matter settled by the courts. If the investigation sustains the action of the board, let the defeated parties submit as gracefully as possible, but if it is proven that a fraud has been committed, then let the perpetrators suffer exemplary damages to the extent of the law.

In the meantime let us be as quiet and conservative as possible.

NOTES AND NEWS.

The recent socialist disturbances in Chicago and other large cities are a legitimate result of the systems employed by certain large corporations during the past dozen years. In many cases when laboring men have organized to resist reductions in wages, they have been locked out, and their places filled by foreign imported labor. A large element of this foreign labor has been a class of socialists and communists exiled from their former homes because of their avowed opposition to the government and good society. Under our republican institutions they have found good ground in which to sow the infamous seed of socialism, and the most active among them have become leaders in a conspiracy, which, if carried to its legitimate end, would overthrow the government that gave them protection and prosperity in their exile. The corporations which nurtured them in their poverty are now their victims, and millions of dollars of valuable property are wasted by rioting and incendiarism. One half of this destroyed property equitably distributed among our own workmen, in the way of better wages, in the beginning, would have avoided and prevented the socialist outbreaks which now disrupt the continent. The owners of large manufacturing institutions are not alone the victims of these disturbances. The evil results permeate every grade of society, and those who are at heart in sympathy with the leaders are sufferers with the rest, — not in the loss of property which they have accumulated, but in the loss of labor they might have had, at fair wages, if the industries which support them had not been paralyzed by the interruption and loss of confidence caused by the strikes. In this view of the situation, it behooves all sober-minded citizens to oppose vigorously every system which encourages the removal to this country of foreign pauper or socialist labor for any purpose whatever.

That bomb which exploded on Dearborn street Tuesday night should be the last utterance of anarchy tolerated in Chicago. Until peace is restored, life is insecure, and the law's supremacy is established all agitation for social or industrial reforms should cease. The interests of capital and labor unite in repudiating the rabid sentiment and hideous deeds of the socialists. There can be no compromise with incendiarism and crime. It is folly to palter with the situation. * * * * * * *

It is no time now for reproaches over unheeded warnings. The socialists have let loose their hatred against the peace of the community and the majesty of the law in two days' rioting and one night's hellish work. Will their first attempt to put their theories into practice they have forfeited the right to utter their insane venom against society. If words lead to such deeds, then it becomes the law to stop the mouth that utters and incites murderous, violent, and criminal. The right of free speech must not be construed into the right to advise murder, arson, and anarchy. The nettle communism that has been permitted to flourish in Chicago must be plucked up by the roots now, and those who have watered and tended it must be forever crushed. Chicago invites the residence of the sober, the industrious, and the law abiding of every nation, but it offers no sanctuary for those who would dethrone American law for the rule of the rule of the torch, the bludgeon, and the bomb. The days of socialistic agitation in Chicago are numbered. —Chicago News.

The man who goes into the white house pledged to resist the spoils hunters and do all in his power to destroy the spoils system assumes a burden of trial and tribulation that the general public can hardly conceive. Lawrence Barrett, the actor, who recently visited the white house, is reported in the Augusta (Ga.) Chronicle as follows: "I spent a day six senators who voted for it. The president has already sent to congress during the five months of his term new names than Presidents Arthur, Hayes, or Grant did during their entire terms.—Lansing Journal.

Eight hours as a day's work has been awarded by Chicago employers to 40,000 workmen. The shorter the day the greater the number of employees, and if without increased expense to employer, the 8 hour system can be adopted, it will prove of much advantage to the labor element.

The Marquette Mining Journal of May 8th contains a letter filling seven columns with small type descriptive of Alaska, its climate, customs, prospects, and possibilities, written by Gov. Swineford. Any one interested in that country will find many questions answered in the letter.

Last Thursday, the Chicago Daily News printed the enormous circulation of 224,293 copies; the total for the week ending Saturday evening was 1,165,589, and the daily average for the week was 193,928 copies.

Iron estimates the construction of new railroads for 1886 at 6,000 miles. We should like to know if the 18 miles between Boyne and Traverse City had been figured in.—Elk Rapids Progress.

Jeff. Davis and the New South.

In commenting on the appearance of Jefferson Davis at Montgomery, the Vicksburg Commercial-Herald, the leading democratic organ in Mississippi, says:

"Mr. Jefferson Davis is not of the new South. He is of the old South. He said things at Montgomery that would have been better unsaid, and did not say things that he, of all men, ought to have said."

We believe this is the sentiment of the best men in the south. Mr. Davis has been a recluse during the last 20 years, and has devoted his time to brooding over the fancied wrongs of the south and his own broken political fortunes. He has taken no part and apparently but little interest in the development of the new south, and has hardly any appreciation of the surprising strides which she has taken in the direction of commercial progress and industrial activity. He has been utterly oblivious to the immense changes which have been wrought in the social, political and industrial life of the South, and is utterly unable to speak for the new generation of merchants, manufacturers, and planters of that regenerated country. He merely gives utterance to the heartrimmings of an old and disappointed political Bourbon. —Lansing Journal.

It is reported as we go to press that an attempt was made just before noon to move the furniture of the county clerk's office, and that in a very short time the office and street were full of interested spectators. No violence was offered, and no interference made beyond crowding the room so full of men that it was impossible to take any furniture out.

M. J. Stackman is out on the street again after his wrestle with the bath in the Sanitarium. His case will be watched with a good deal of interest by our people. Being the first to come under the care of the institution, on its success or failure will depend a large measure of the confidence of our people in the curative methods employed by Dr. Sweetland.

Bridge Street House Opened.

On Tuesday this house was opened to the public, and a large number of our citizens extended their greeting to the new landlord R. A. Campbell, by going there to dinner. The dining room was tastefully decorated, and if the bill of fare is to be maintained throughout the season we can safely warrant complete satisfaction to the hungry. Our first impressions are that Mrs. Campbell is an excellent entertainer, and we have no reason to doubt that our first impression will be lasting. The sleeping rooms in the house are not all settled, but enough is done to meet the present needs of the public. With Mr. and Mrs. Campbell's acquaintance in the Traverse region, we have no doubt the house will receive its full share of the business of the traveling public during the coming season.

Metropolitan Comedy Company.

Bartlebloomer's opera hall was well filled last night to witness the opening of the engagement with the above company. The play for the evening, "Divorce," is a strong one, and the characters were generally well sustained. One feature however which should be eliminated is the slang (which approaches vulgarity) indulged in by some of the characters, and certainly not a necessity to a full understanding of the play. To night they will put on the "Banker's Daughter."

The Supervisors and the County Seat.

The board of supervisors met at Boyne City last Thursday, pursuant to the call mentioned in this paper two weeks ago. Called to order by county clerk Thatcher.

Supervisor Ava Smith, of Eveline, asked the object of the meeting. The clerk replied that he did not remember the special object, but that it was called by request of one-third of the board. Supervisor Harris, of Norwood, asked to have the call read. After some search among his papers, the clerk said he did not have a copy with him.

Mr. Harris then protested in writing that this meeting was illegal, as there was no call presented to the board, no object stated, and no necessity for a meeting at this time.

This protest staggered the managers for a moment, but supervisor Norton of Evangeline, suggested that the protest be put on file, which was done, and business proceeded regardless of the protest.

A. K. Smith, of Melrose, was made chairman

Mr. Harris moved to adjourn to 1 o'clock, to allow the chairman time to appoint standing committees. This was lost by yeas and nays, 9 to 6.

Mr. Norton immediately moved to take a recess of 15 minutes for the same purpose, and this was carried, 9 to 6.

At the close of the recess the committees were read, but it was clear to many that the manager's hand had constructed them some hours in advance.

Mr. Norton moved that a special committee be appointed to canvass the vote on the question of the removal of the county seat. Carried by yeas and nays, 9 to 6. The chair appointed Messrs. Kilham of Deer Lake, McKibbin of Hudson, and Williams of Resort. These three towns represent only 188 votes,—all but two being for removal. (If the canvass must be made by a committee instead of it open board, it certainly would have exhibited a spirit of fairness to have composed it of five members, giving two members to the west end, representing six townships, and three from the east representing nine townships.)

The supervisors from Charlevoix, Eveline, Marion, Norwood, South Arm, and Wilson protested against the canvass by a committee instead of an open board. The protest was placed on file as before, and business proceeded.

Mr. Norton moved that a recess of 30 minutes be taken to allow the committee to make the canvass. Carried.

After the committee came in, and before receiving their report, several motions to adjourn were lost, 9 to 6.

The committee then read the vote by townships as follows:

	For	Against
	Removal.	Removal.
Bear Lake	50
Boyne Valley	30	21
Hudson	40
Charlevoix	125	87
Evangeline	100
Eveline	56	28
Marion	30	46
Norwood	213
Resort	58	13
Wilson	36	58
Totals	1,086	1,065

Leaving out South Arm, Melrose, and Norwood, but giving their totals and majority the same as if the townships were equal.

It has been asserted by some who saw the report that it was evidently in the handwriting of a man who had a seat on the floor of the hall and was not with the committee, and not a member of the board, and that it bore evidence of having been prepared in advance, and the fact of part of it being left out by the committeeman who read the report shows that he was not thoroughly familiar with it.

Mr. Norton moved that the report be accepted and adopted.

Mr. Harris then asked that two supervisors be appointed from the west, and to act with the present committee, and that a new canvass be made. This was lost by the usual vote 9 to 6.

A motion to adjourn was also lost.

Mr. Harris then presented a protest, signed by the six supervisors, against the count of the vote of Evangeline for the reason that more votes for the removal of the county seat are certified than were polled at the election, and that the certificate was not the certificate of election. They also protested against the count of the vote from Hayes, because the certificate presented was not the certificate as required by law, not having been made at any session or meeting of the board of election.

This was also placed on file, and Mr. Norton's motion to accept and adopt the report of the committee was carried.

A motion by Mr. Harris to adjourn to 3 o'clock was lost, and within three minutes Mr. Norton moved to adjourn to 3 o'clock, for the purpose of examining the proposed location for county offices which was carried.

On reconvening, the nine supervisors constituting a majority of the board, ordered the clerk and sheriff to remove the records and county property as soon as convenient; and in case they are not to be found that new records be provided at the expense of the county. At this point, supervisors Harris, Wyatt, Upright, Smith, Hipp, and Hadkins withdrew from further action with the board, and protested generally against all the proceedings.

These six towns represent a vote of 227 for removal, and 1,199 against removal.

The nine supervisors continued in session Friday and Saturday, in routine business.

A Great Curiosity.

P. A. Corlen came from Sweden in this country last year and settled in Grand Rapids, Mich. In the old country he was an expert engraver, and being a fine workman and unemployed he set about making a pipe. For four months he worked with his jackknife on hickhorn and amber and made a pipe. It is composed of 3,036 pieces and the engraving is of a superior order. It is fifty four feet in length, and around the bowl are pictures of Presidents of the United States. The man intended originally to make the pipe for the Crown Prince of Sweden, but his friends in Grand Rapids advised him to sell it by lottery. He has 1,000 chances at a quarter a dollar, and of this number has disposed of 800 chances.—Reed-yard (Ill.) Gazette.

THE COQUETTE.

Ah, the soft, the perfumed lures,
Oh, the fine, distracting graces,
And her eyes
Like stars, cut from these plays
Too fair very years old wine!
And her hair, in ripples golden,
Like a poppy down-drooping,
Yet also spreads
Then a smile breaks through the waves,
Through the darting, dimpled rows
Of her cheeks!
Ah! the dreams she had disclosed
When she slept.

Roses caught blushes forever—
They need fade
Who hath found a light that never
Casts a shade?

Lovers talk the—scores of lovers,
Hot to issue her heart discovers
Ever—
Cross-old, yet half relenting,
Scorned now, though half repenting,
Half believed, but not—swearing
To be kind.
Young and old now, salute and simpers,
Veterans started and now beginners,
She for—to—to—those are women!
Hot to find—
Heart and hand—ay! life to do or her,
Free to—free to—find adorer—
Time and heavenly grace restore her—
Hint is she.

* * * * * * *

Thus to years goes by
I painted the picture of a fair coquette;
To-day I wan the time—hold—with the sigh
Of heartful deep regret.

To tightly speak—at all—of womankind
Is a—to—to—to—
And to look for constancy—
Shall seek release in vain.

Bud and I not—the roses fall from blight
However fair they bloom,
And never yet was seen a grove of light
Without the shadow's gloom!

I saw her when at last
A lover caught her from the silent land,
And she—unlike her old self of the past—
Gave him her heart and hand.
And so it came to be—
The cloud of sorrow that passed from her cheek
Beneath the sunlight of her joy did not speak,
But kissed her silent.
A year—may! I dreamed—
But round her life from—where those came no break,
There played a smile—in which her and did seem
Congeniality with death.

None shall blame her—none shall blame her,
Where her lover came to claim her
I, And she gave him heart and hand;
For the angel that is—Hope bear her
Where the gates of heaven stand,
Ever after and—to—Inter
And that I mocked that shining hand,
Let the angel—Hope—forgive me not her,
Maybe—but that—I—go not.
There is some who still claim
For they who for making excuse
Than the smile she gave St. Peter
As she entered through the gate.

A ROMANCE OF THE SEA.

During a visit to some friends in Charleston, while on a leave of absence from H. M. S. Diana, Lieutenant Howard Granville fell in love with a dark-eyed girl of eighteen named Helena Bird.

She was an orphan, living at the house of her uncle, Alfonso Bird, who was an American by birth and a Spaniard by descent.

For some years he had been a sailing-master aboard an armed United States schooner, where, he informed Granville, he had often been promised promotion, but was still neglected, which he ascribed to his descent. He mentioned several persons who had not been long in the navy as he and yet had obtained places above him.

"If I were like some men I would be revenged," he added, bitterly.

A man should always do his duty, whether promoted or not," said the British officer.

A fortnight later the schooner sailed on a surveying expedition off the African coast. Helena had accompanied her uncle. Although she and Granville were lovers, there was a singular coldness in her manner when they parted.

The lieutenant often thought of it afterward, and imagined that the sailing-master had prejudiced her against him.

A month later Granville's ship was ordered to cruise for a slaver, which, it was reported, had lately been noticed off the coast of Africa.

In due time, passing the Cape Verdes, the English frigate stood on her way toward the Gold Coast, in the vicinity of which the outlaw craft had last been seen.

On the starboard side of the upper deck the captain was one day walking to and fro, and on the larboard side stood Lieutenant Granville, now and then glancing aloft.

Suddenly, from the young lookouts at the masthead came the cry of "Sail O!"

"Where away?" hailed Granville.

"Right ahead, sir! About five miles off."

The captain seized his glass, and sprang upon the horse-block.

"She looks suspicious, sir," he said to the lieutenant, as he passed the glass to him.

Granville had an eye like a hawk; he could see further than most men on the water.

"Ay, ay, sir, a suspicious craft," he remarked, after a brief inspection. "It seems to me she has a familiar look, although I cannot recall where I have seen her before."

"She is not very low in the water, sir, and the rigging," but I do not like her looks for all that."

Granville said he thought she had some thing the appearance of an armed craft.

"These, sir, are not the days of pirates," rejoined the captain, smiling. "Why do you think she is armed?"

"I may have been mistaken, sir, at so great a distance," answered the lieutenant, "but, upon I looked through the glass, I fancied I saw a port closed."

"Try her with the cutter, quartermaster."

"Ay, ay, sir."

And, turning, the lieutenant beheld Alfonso Bird.

At the same moment, beneath him, he heard yells and the clanking of chains.

"This, then, is a slaver," cried Granville, as soon as he had recovered from his surprise at seeing Bird, "and you are her captain!"

"Ay, Granville. The story is told in a few words. If you have not already guessed it, I headed the crew of the naval schooner in mutiny, I killed the captain and his officers, I made alterations in the craft, changed her name, and then went into the slave trade with her. At last I have won my promotion with my own hand, for I now command this vessel. Better than all, I have had my revenge on the captain, who was a tyrant. Will you shake hands with me?"

"No. Your hand is stained with a crime which a British officer can not overlook."

"And, were it in your power, you would make a prisoner of the uncle of Helena Bird?"

"I would."

"And marry his niece afterward?"

"Was Helena with you when you mutined? Surely she is not dead?"

"No; for she would not have approved of my mutiny. She wanted me to have a pretence by simply obtaining my discharge from the navy. I did not even take leave of my design, but, being before its execution, I left her at Monrovia."

Drawing the young officer further aft, beyond hearing of the sailors, he continued: "Promise me that you will not betray the character of this vessel to your captain!"

"I will give no such promise."

"Then you and I shall both go down in the same coffin!"

"What do you mean?"

"Even soon explain. My craft is not a swift sailor, and she could not get away from your frigate. When I sighted the ship I knew I could not escape in that manner, but I hoped that the naval appearance of my schooner, and the exchange of one or two signals, would allay your captain's suspicions, and that he would then keep away from me. When my vessel was first questioned, I feared that all hope was gone. I resolved my crew to fight, and I had ready for such an occasion, still thinking that that might possibly satisfy your commander. When I perceived that it did not, I resolved to scuttle my craft and go down with all on board—slaves and all—sooner than fall into the hands of your naval people. I saw you coming, however, I recognized you, and I resolved that you alone should get aboard here. I wanted to make my proposition to you. Now, all I have to say to you is this: There, by the after sail, is a good life preserver, and I still give you a chance to save yourself by changing your mind, and also to make my niece your wife. Promise me that if I do not scuttle this craft, you will, when you return to yours, inform your captain that you found my vessel and paper perfectly right and lawful. Promise that, and I will send you aboard when the latest squall passes in one of my boats. You can then wed with my niece and welcome, as soon as you have the opportunity, for I know you both love each other, although I will own that I did not at one time like the thought of wedding her to a Britisher, and endeavored to prejudice her against you."

"I refuse to make the promise you ask, even for the sake of winning your niece, who is dearer to me than life! I am an Englishman, and as such I still repeat that I would do my duty by reporting the character of your craft and her captain."

"That is your determination?"

"It is. My duty before all other considerations."

The slaver ordered Granville to be locked on the quarter-deck.

A few minutes later he heard the roaring, rushing sound of the water as it pouring in to the hold, and he knew that Bird had scuttled the schooner. The yells and shrieks of the poor chained slaves, dreadful to hear, were soon succeeded by their groans, long cries, as the water rolled over their heads.

In that storm the vessel sank fast. Granville could hear the men on deck making vain efforts to lower a boat in time to save themselves.

The prisoner was fortunate enough to find an ax. He beat down the door of his room as the schooner was making her last plunge, and flung himself toward the open companion-way. He checked a spare spar, which, with other things, was being swept from it, and to this he clung.

The squall had nearly gone to leeward; the violence of the gale had abated; and, after tossing about for some time in the heaving seas, the young officer, with about half a dozen of the schooner's men who had also clung to floating objects, were picked up by the drifting cutter, which, with difficulty, had been kept from swamping during the squall.

On arriving aboard the frigate, Granville gave a true account of what had happened.

Some time afterward he had the painful task of telling the story to Helena Bird.

Sad was it was to the beautiful girl; but, even while almost distracted by her uncle's crime and fate, she remained the esteemed her lover for having so timely interfered to his duty. The team were married a few months later.

Table Manners.

Good table manners are founded on habits of punctuality, neatness, and order, united with that politeness which springs readily from a kind heart.

Everything at the table should be done noiselessly.

Do not be impatient to be served, or feel, while eating, that you must hurry and get through so that you can run off to something else. This is bad enough when it is necessary; it is almost inexcusable when it is not.

Avoid all unusual noise when eating. Never fill the mouth very full nor talk with the mouth full.

Never leave the table with food in the mouth.

Never sit a foot off from the table, nor jammed up close against it.

Never soil the tablecloth if it is possible to avoid it.

Don't be greedy, and don't try to eat all the good things you can, and don't carry off anything in your pocket to eat afterward.

Don't speak of it if you see any one else greedy. It is never polite to appear to notice faults of others in company.

Do not encourage a dog or cat to play with you at the table.

Do not cut your bread—break it.

Never express a choice for any particular part of a dish, unless requested to do so. When asked what part of a chicken you will have, asks other people the trouble of choosing for you, and say what you will have, making some choice, though really not particular, as you might say,

"Never hold bones in your fingers while you eat from them.

Cut the meat with a knife, and do not make an effort to clean your plate or the bone you have been eating from too clean.

Do not attract attention to yourself by calling loudly for anything, or by any boisterous conduct. We have seen children who made their wants known by giving two or three loud knocks on the table with handles of their knives, and by the same means they had "waited" a long time before they could get attention.

Even if the phrase "woollen tonsils" be limited in meaning to express only a condition of some duration, it does not always mean the same thing. In health the tonsil is very small—So small that we think we have studied them very particularly think that it does not exist in the sense of being a visible prominence. Now, when the tonsil becomes enlarged and remains so it may be from remarkable causes and conditions, or it may not. The one group of cases may be considered as those in which much of the enlargement is due to an excess of blood in the tissues, and the other group contains cases in which actual overgrowth of the tonsil has occurred. In the former cases the enlargement may diminish until the tonsil, while still larger than proper, gives no very great trouble. In the latter the most experienced observers doubt if any treatment short of removal of the tonsil by some means is of much value. The popular idea about outgrowing the condition is based partly upon the false assumption that what is really a considerably enlarged tonsil is the natural state of things, and partly upon the vanity of new professional observers to distinguish between the temporary swelling of the tonsils, the chronically enlarged tonsils, and the really overgrown tonsils. The opinion of the most "experienced mother" can be of no value here. She cannot, at the outside, have seen more than one or two of the last-mentioned variety.—Babyhood.

Invisible Clouds.

In the recent English tests of lighthouse illuminants was brought out the curious fact—of great practical as well as scientific interest—that remarkable changes in the transparency of the air occur without any visible haze or mist. Invisible clouds seemed to float by, obscuring the lights for a time; and it was thought that it was for this that French lights showed with unabated brilliancy, the experimental lights only a mile and a quarter away, had lost one-fourth to one-third their power.

JAPAN, according to the new census, has a population of 38,500,000, or about the same as that of the United States in 1870. In area Japan is about five times the size of Pennsylvania.

WEATHER SIGNS.

Which May Be Observed by Early-Rising Students of Nature.

The man who is out of doors at sunrise can form a pretty accurate opinion of what the day will be. If just before the sun—is suffused with red, rain generally follows in the course of the day. In winter, often snow. If, however, it be frosty weather, the downfall is sometimes delayed. On the other hand, if the sky be a dull gray, and the sun rises clear, gradually dispersing the vapors, it will be fine. If he arises behind the clouds, and there are reddish streaks about, it will rain. Should the sun, later in the day, shine through a gray watery haze, it will probably be a rainy night. The sunset is very unreliable. Often a beautiful sunset will be followed by a bad day. After a rainy day, suddenly at sunset, in the far west, will appear a magnificent streak of crimson (not copper color)—this generally foretells a fine day. A tinted halo around the sun or moon, also in long-continued rainy weather. A halo around the moon, especially if some distance from it, is a sure indication of downfall at hand. Rainbows are invariable except they occur in the morning, when rain may be expected. Sunrings, and fragments of prismatic colors during the day, show continued unsettled weather. A dazzling metallic lustre on foliage during a cloudless day in summer precedes a change.

Huge piled-up masses of white cloud in a blue sky, during winter, indicate snow or hail. If small, dark clouds move at a level below the upper ones, moving faster than they, rain will follow, as it will if, in the morning, low-hanging, pale-brown, smoke-like clouds are floating about. Red-tinged clouds, high up, at evening, are followed by wind, occasionally by rain. Mists at evening over low-lying ground, or near a river, portend fine and warm days. If a mist in the morning clears off as the sun gets higher it will be fine; but if it settles down again after lifting a little, rain is at hand. No dew in the morning is mostly followed by rain; and a heavy dew in the evening by a fine day. If, at evening, are three successive hoar frosts. A shower of hail in the daytime is usually followed by frost at night. If, after rain, drops of water still hang on the branches and twigs, and no window frames, the rain will return; but if they fall, and the wood work dries, fine weather is at hand. Stones turn damp before wet; at the same time it must be changed that the fact of their doing so does not invariably indicate rain, for they will do so occasionally before heat. Smoke descending heavily to the ground is a sign of very decidedly bad weather. Birds, at great distances, which are generally invisible, are seen, or even not seen at all, some men loom out clear and distinct. When this happens bad weather follows. Distant sounds, which are known instances of this is the lake of Zurich, as seen from Southsea, if on the opposite shore is plainly seen, there is rain about. If, at night, after being blown out and exposed to the center air, the wick of a candle continues to smoulder a long time, the next day will be fine. Green-colored sky betokens unsettled, bad weather, often long continued. If on a blue sky, the moon appears clearly rise in a revolving, spiral column, rain will follow.

The howling of the wind indicates, in most houses, but not invariably, that downfall is near. In some houses, owing to their construction, the wind howls in season. Whenever the wind, at time of the vernal equinox (March 21) is thunderous, that will be found the sailing wind throughout the next three months. If the stars appear unusually numerous and the Milky way very clearly defined, with the surrounding sky dark, or if there is a misty appearance over the stars, rain is coming; while if they be but few stars, and those very bright and sparkling, it is fair, stately sky, it will be fine. Swine, before rain, are remarkably restless and restless. Swallows in fine weather will fly high, and at the approach of rain close to the ground; but the latter does not apply if the day is cold, in which case they hawk very low. Common sparrows washing vigorously in a puddle on the road, or at the edge of running water, is a sure sign of rain. A baker who kept a parrot in the dry atmosphere of the bake-office noticed that a few hours before rain the bird took an unusual bath, fluttering as if splashing water, and preening her feathers.—Cassell's Family Magazine.

The Walter Gave Him Away.

A Washington correspondent writes: It is one of the fallacies of the capital that there are no intoxicating li quors to be had in the Senate restaurant. The other day a dignified but thirsty member of Congress took a seat in this house adjoining one a party of ladies, and calling a colored waiter whispered to him to fetch a slug of whisky. Straightening up, the darky bawled out at the top of his voice:

"Cold tea for one."

Now, the expression "Cold tea for one" is a well understood one in the political lar-rooms as "Hey, Rube!" is in a circus. Therefore, it is not surprising that the Congressman, who didn't want everybody in the District of Columbia to know that he was taking a nip of the forbidden juice, got most informally "fired" on the spot, whereupon he says: Springing to his feet the member grabbed the waiter by the neck, and in his wrath exclaimed:

"You —— black ——! I'll break your ——— black head if you ever howl for cold tea like that for me again!"

Only last July Judge John Robinson could give you any idea of the way in which that into Congressman cursed that "nigger," as he called him.

THEY were at a concert in Chicago, and Beethoven's Fifth Symphony had been played. "It is beautiful," said she, "but I adore the entire nine." "Yes," replied her companion, "they are the best in the world." "So striking," she added. "Can't be beat on striking," he echoed. "Wonderful in the finale!" "Their catching was what did the business," she exclaimed, enthusiastically. "Their fielding is down to a fine point." "Why, what on earth are you talking about, George—the Boston nine pin phonies?" THERE is a debating society at the Harvard Annex where grave questions of sociology and ethics are discussed by the young women. THE representative of one of the great so-called religious papers of the country called at one of our large Connecticut factories and offered as a personal favor to write up the whole concern in big shape for $1,000. The offer was declined in the same noble spirit of self-sacrifice with which it was made. Then it was received at $500 (under a promise of secrecy if accepted). This was declined, too; and the religious representative knocked himself down for by step until, while his first demand was for $1,000, his last offer was for $17 for nothing if they would take fifty copies of the paper containing the proposed article! And they couldn't accept that; they didn't so much object to being written up, but they didn't want to be fooled by a fake, they said, with the fifty papers.—Hartford Courant.

ACCOUNTS show that the saltpeter beds of Nevada are for better situated than their development indicates the silver region of South America, which is arid desert. Water for all purposes is a necessity, and it is now found in the ocean water and carried to the nitre fields, the cost of procuring from the mountains in South Chili. In Nevada, the saltpeter deposits are in the vicinity of a rich farming country, with an abundant supply of water and wood at hand.

LADIES OF CHARLEVOIX:—Why is it there are not more christian women interested in the W. C. T. U. of this village? Or, if you are not christians but have any desire to be, it will help you to attend their meeting of prayer and song as much as outside influences can. And if you are a professing christian, I fail to see how you can find a reasonable excuse; for if you are not interested in temperance in all things, and you are surely working for christianity if you are a follower of Christ, and after woman, the first word in our name, (of course you are interested in yourself and our sex,) is christian, and temperance, first but thirdly. But allowing that you are one of these peculiar christians who want nothing to do with temperance, why do you not come and help in the name of woman and christianity? And if not in union with their temperance ideas, are you not aware that the Union comprises thirty-nine distinct departments, which I cannot give in detail here, but all are for the good and improvements of our sex, morally, mentally and health? Are you not interested in some one of these departments enough to give a little of your time and talents to forward the good work Are you not interested in your own children, in the hereditary, hygiene and scientific instructions, S. S. work, Sunday observance, or the new department of social purity, auxiliary to the White Cross society for men, and can it be that a woman exists who does not believe that man should be held to the same standard of purity as woman; is there a mother who does not desire her boys to be pure as her girls, and will that day ever come unless christian women demand it? Then there is the Kindergarten, kitchen garden, drawing, room work, flower mission, suppression of impure literature, and department of hygiene education, with many more. Surely you are not willing to admit you are not interested in something for the good of humanity in general or future welfare of your children? Do you daily pray "Lord lead us not into temptation," and do you believe He is more apt to lead you into temptation than you are others? I feel more like saying: Lord keep me from being a stumbling block and leading others into temptation. But again, why are you not a worker in the W. C. T. U? As it was Mrs. Lathrop asked not long ago: "Are you too awfully good, too pure, too intelligent or stylish, too exclusive to associate with women who are working for your good as well as their own?" If so, and you think this is all they lack, come and add your style etc., and leaven the lump. Or, is it because you have not time, if so, I can truly inform you that the workers have no more time than you, and every one of them do most of their own work, even to washing and sewing, and tight their finalies are as well cared foras others who have no time for good works. Or, do you say the Union here does not do as much as it should, or work in all these departments as in other places? This is true, but it is because you christian women do not help as in other places. There is all the work waiting for you, for the old workers are doing all they can, and will still find plenty to do. Will you not think it over and see if you are not interested in some one thing to give your knowledge to make it successful and when one has a matter at heart they develop talent if they only go to work. There ought to be thirty-nine educated christian women in this city, capable and willing to become successful leaders of one department, thus making a Union second to none, and do not stand aside criticising those women for what they are not doing, when you are doing nothing, and neglecting the work at your own door, even a cup of water to the thirsty ones. Is Lois Christ-like? If you are a christian you ought to be a peacemaker, and if you get along without trouble in other societies, you can in this, but should trouble arise from some discontent element, you would better be on the right side in a trouble than an idler in Christ's vineyard, neither giving or receiving. And as a member of the Union every women can help or be helped, and you cannot gain strength without God's help, and christian association, and it is for women, christianity, temperance, God, home and native land. Are you not for all or one of these, and if not, why not? "He that is not for me is against me."

TEN YEARS AGO, on December 26th, 1875, The CHICAGO DAILY NEWS was founded. It was the pioneer of low-priced journalism in the west. From the first the controlling conviction of its managers has been that a "cheap paper" should be cheap only in price; that its news should be as fresh and complete, its editorial discussion as able, and its general tone and character as pure and healthful as its best and highest-priced contemporary. This has been its ideal. How well it has succeeded in the actual attainment of so high a standard is best evidenced in the fact that it now regularly prints and sells over 150,000 papers a day.—a larger circulation than that of all other Chicago dailies combined.

The CHICAGO DAILY NEWS is an INDEPENDENT newspaper. It is not a mere echo of any party. It is partisan. Neither is it a neutral. It is a paper of positive opinion, expressed without fear or favor. It seeks the patronage of people who love country more than party.

The CHICAGO DAILY NEWS is the only 2 cent paper in the west that is a member of the Associated Press. It prints ALL THE NEWS.

Sold by all news dealers, two cents a copy, mornings between the city limits of Chicago, or delivered by carriers at the rate of 50 cents per month.

The CHICAGO WEEKLY NEWS—8 pages, 64 columns—is the largest dollar weekly in America.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the condition of a certain mortgage, made by Mary Hinchman to John Pirsig, dated October 8th, A. D. 1881, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, for the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, on the 24 day of October, A. D. 1881, in liber 4 of mortgages on page 491, on which mortgage there is claimed to be due the 6th day of December 1885, assigned by said John A. Harris to Frederick W. Mayne, said assignment being on record in the Registers office for Charlevoix county, in liber 1 of assignments on page 1 thereof, and no suit or proceeding at law or in chancery has been instituted to recover the money secured in said mortgage, or any part thereof. Now, therefore, by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and the statute in such case made and provided, the said premises will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door of the Town hall in the village of East Jordan, that being the place where the Circuit Court for said County is holden, on the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as shall be necessary to pay the amount due and unpaid on said mortgage, with fees per cent interest, and all legal costs and charges, including an attorney fee of fifteen dollars, covenanted for therein, the premises being described in said mortgage as follows, to wit: Lot numbered three (3) in block numbered five (5) in the village of East Jordan, according to the recorded plat thereof, which said premises will be sold on the 20th day of June, A. D. 1886, at one o'clock in the afternoon of said day.

Prince and Pearl.

In the same year, on the very same day,
Two little babies were born;
One was a doggy, and one was a girl;
One was named Prince, and one was named Pearl—
All on a New Year's morn.

And in one cradle the babies slept
All through the midwinter weather;
One on her pillow, dimpled and sweet,
And one curled up at the darling's feet—
Prince and Pearl together.

But Prince grew fast, as doggies will,
Pearl, she was a little slow;
With a cow-block rent that was curly and fine,
With a big, big back and a sorrowful whine;
And he learned to know right from wrong.

And Prince would sit by the baby Pearl,
Howling her white hair slept,
And if the baby cried or wept,
And the mother was free to come of go,
For Prince a true watch kept.

And he'd hear excuses from baby hands,
Will never so much as a whine;
And Pearl on his back was secure from harm,
Riding, riding, riding over the farm—
Having, truly, old Prince!

And when Pearl went to the village school,
A mile or more away,
Prince carried her satchel, and primer, too,
And waited on to fetch her when school was out—
Good, faithful Prince!

O, they were the best of friends,
In sunny or stormy weather;
Pearl, the amiable and gentle; by the sea,
Prince, the faithful, would always be
Prince and Pearl together.

A MAORI DANCE.

What an Astonished English Tourist Saw in the Land of the Golden Fleece.

Before the "haka" commenced the principal chief present made a rather lengthy speech to the intending performers. I understood from the interpreter present that the chief exhorted the corps de ballet, both male and female, to do their very best that evening; not to indulge in any unseemly or frivolous antics—what, in American parlance, are known as "monkey-shines," I presume—but to govern themselves in strict accordance with the immutable traditions of the "haka," as handed down to them from their remote ancestors. Then the chief, a tall, old man, with a very sonorous voice and very dignified mien, sat down on a low stool, and leaning forward, clasping their knees with their hands, a number of ancient Maori women, and then the "haka" commenced in earnest. It may not be altogether correct to term this extraordinary exhibition a dance, since it does not comprise any absolute saltatory movements of the extremities. It is rather a kind of rhythmical stampede, wild but measured—now ferocious, and now sensuous. Of the words of the grim performers I understood not a syllable. The "haka" began again, but that tall Maori in the cabbage-tree hat and with the slop-pail of beer had broken the spell, and it could not be renewed. We sent our compliments to the chief, with an intimation that we were more than satisfied with the proceedings of the evening; so, after one more "attacapelo," and one more howling chorus of the "Hotleot to tairs" type, the chief made another speech, and the assembly was dismissed. I had witnessed a remarkably strange and interesting spectacle, full of matter for meditation. I have put down neither more nor less than we term "haka" now. The aspect which a "haka" can assume when the natives are filled with rum by thoughtless or by "darrikin" tourists I can imagine—and imagine with a shudder.—George Augustus Sala, in the London Telegraph.

Social Courage.

All are not ladies who wear a woman's dress. When the old man in Sheridan's comedy said, as he bowed himself out of the parlor, "Ladies, I leave my character in your hands" he knew his dear friends would tear it to tatters, before the sound of the closing hall door announced his departure.

Sir Charles Grandison and Sir Roger de Coverly may have been a little stiff, not to say pompous, and their old-school manners would be too deliberate for this fast age. But neither they, nor their wives and daughters, ever found fault with host or hostess, nor would they have listened for a moment to any one censuring the person whose hospitality they were accepting.

One of the descendants of these courtly old gentlemen still lives. She is a lady, and resides in Washington. The other day, as we learn from the New York Sun, she astounded a group of female visitors by her outrageous rebuke of their bad breeding.

Among the callers on her reception day were several ladies who, on the previous evening, had attended a large party given by a millionaire and his wife. The party was criticised by these callers, and its hostess picked to pieces. In a lull of the conversation, they turned to the lady on whom they were calling, and appealed to her to confirm their criticisms, in such a direct way that she was forced to speak.

"Well, ladies," she answered, with that repose of manner and calmness of tone which are such excellent things in women, "I have never eaten of her bread and salt, and, of course, know nothing of her as a hostess. But if I accepted her hospitality, I should know nothing unkind of her either as a hostess or a woman."

The courage of the lady, though magnificent, did not cause the visitors to prolong their call.—Youth's Companion.

What right have you to an inch of their lands? Why did your missionaries come to worry the Maori? He had his priests, his idols, his ancestors, his superstitions, and his taps. You have given him pigs and potatoes and steamers, it is true; but where are his war canoes; and in the matter of food, what more succulent could there be found than a carefully-baked enemy? They were the sons and grandsons of cannibals, who were yelling and yanking, stamping and writhing, trying to lash themselves, so you thought, into a paroxysm of bloodthirsty madness. And then with what wondrous celerity the scene changed: the men retreated, the women were once more in the front rank, clamoring and shrieking. The remains of Thomas J. Harney, a prominent citizen of St. Paul, were cremated at Pittsburgh. The body weighed 200 pounds, and was reduced to eight, the ashes being forwarded by express to relatives.

Joseph O'Donnell, the leading spirit in all the street-car strikes in New York this spring, has been forced to resign his membership in the executive committee of the Knights of Labor. His action in agreeing to end the Third Avenue strike was repudiated by Assembly No. 75.

The E. L. Spencer Novelty Company, of Wallingford, Conn., failed for about $150,000.

Mr. Andrew Carnegie proposes to increase his donation to the Pittsburgh Free library fund to $500,000, provided the city will raise an equal amount and maintain the institution by public taxation.

In a fit of jealousy Norman Lounsbery, aged seventy-eight, a farmer living near Oswego, N. Y., shot his wife, aged sixteen, and her relative, Horace Payson, thirty-five years old, and then killed himself. Mrs. Lounsbery and Payson died within an hour.

A storm in the mountains on the Pennsylvania Road blew several large trees upon the track near Conemaugh. The result was the wrecking of a long freight train, by which a conductor, engineer, and fireman were killed. Twenty-five cars were broken into fragments.

Dr. Frederick A. Palmer, aged 73, a well-known homeopathic physician at Boston, left his residence with his 4-year-old grandson and took passage on the steamer bound for Portland, Me. During the night the lessor jumped overboard with the child, but all efforts to recover the bodies proved fruitless.

Gov. Hill's approval of the Arcade Railway bill foreseats a busy time on Broadway, says a New York dispatch. If the tremendous project is carried out thousands of workmen will be tearing up the street this summer, and within three to five years a four-track electric railway will be carrying rapid trains through the Arcade subway under an iron wagon-way. It will occupy all the room from curb to curb, and on the two inner tracks express trains will be run at thirty miles an hour, capable of carrying 1,000,000 passengers a day. The route is from the battery up Broadway to Harlem River, with a branch under Madison square running up Madison avenue to the Harlem. The completion of the road will occupy 5,000 men for five years.

WESTERN.

Southern Missouri and Kansas were last week visited by an immense rain-pour. Jordan Creek, which runs directly through Springfield, Mo., rose higher than for many years, overflowing the low land and driving thirty or forty families from their homes. Some of the women and children were carried to safe places on horseback and on men's shoulders to escape drowning, the water in some places rising even into the second stories of the dwellings. The total damage in Springfield cannot by the flood be estimated at $75,000, and in the surrounding country at $40,000. A disastrous case of drowning is reported from near Fort Scott, Kan. A dam broke, and the immense body of water, unlike with the already swollen Bush Run, rushed down the valley. The house occupied by Sarah Brown, a widow, was struck by the torrent and swept about one hundred yards down the stream, where it lodged against the trees. Mr. Brown and four of her children were in it at the time. The water rose rapidly around it to the depth of several feet. The mother held her little six-months-old infant in her arms above the water, leaving her other children to care for themselves. She suddenly noticed that her five-year-old boy was drowning, and in attempting to save him the infant slipped from her arms and was drowned before aid could reach it. The remainder of the family were rescued.

Under a decree of foreclosure, the Quincy, Missouri and Pacific Road was sold by a special master at St. Louis. Edwin Parsons, of New York, acting for the first mortgage bondholders, paid $1,000,000 for the line.

William Fordyce, of Wabash, Ind., overtook Alf Watkins, a married man, as he was walking with Fordyce's daughter, and cut him dangerously about the head and face. Watkins is likely to die and Fordyce has been placed in jail.

During the recent riots in Chicago, Bohemian anarchists sacked and destroyed a drug-store at the corner of West Eighteenth street and Center avenue. It now develops that nearly a dozen anarchists who participated in the looting of the store have died from drinking poisonous concoctions under the belief that they were swallowing single-foot whisky. A half-dozen more are sick nigh unto death, and with small hopes of recovery. It also transpires that several of the participants in the riots were buried in the Bohemian Cemetery without permits, which leads to the conclusion that the policemen fired their pistols with better aim and more deadly effect than was at first supposed. The owner of the building occupied by the Nihilistic Arbeiter Zeitung filed a bill to set aside the lease granted to the backers of the paper on the ground that the contract has been broken by the storage of explosives in the office, and the lease was canceled. At the meeting of the Chicago Medical Society resolutions were passed deprecating the riots. There is a decided improvement in the labor situation at Cincinnati, and no violence is now anticipated.

The superintendent of the Assay Office at Helena reports that Montana last year produced $25,000,000 in precious metals, the amount of gold being $900,000.

Francis T. Herd, Attorney General of Indiana, having developed an insane jealousy of his wife, has been sent to the asylum. He recently threatened to kill Dr. L. A. Comstock, who thereupon caused an inquiry into Mr. Herd's mental condition.

The deputies who did the shooting at East St. Louis, in April, have been removed from East St. Louis to Belleville (Ill.) jail. The transfer was quietly effected.

SOUTHERN.

A TREE in the Macon (Ga.) suburbs, from which the recent flood swept two negroes, who were drowned, is said to be haunted. At night a white figure is seen seated among its branches, and moans, which grow louder as the night wears on, are frequently heard.

George W. Julian, Surveyor General of New Mexico, has sent to the Commissioner of the General Land Office a complaint against the inaction of Congress on pending claims to three Pendleton grants which keep three hundred thousand acres from settlement.

The May crop report of the Department of Agriculture indicates an improvement during April of two points in wheat, with the general average of condition at 95. The season has been favorable, and the crop is more advanced than usual.

Representative Morrow the other day received a monster petition from the Knights of Labor of California. It is over two thousand feet long and contains the names of over fifty thousand persons. Every State, county, and municipal officer, and every Knight of Labor of California, has signed the petition. Every mule shall in many of the counties of the State has put his name to it. It prays for action on the part of Congress, either by appropriate legislation or by a change in the present treaty with China, as may be necessary, to forever prohibit the further immigration of Chinese to the United States.

POLITICAL.

The Republican members of the Ohio Senate, by a viva voce vote, declared the seats of the absent Senators from Democrats, and seated the four Republican claimants from Hamilton County.

In the Ohio Senate on Monday, the 19th inst., Mr. Van Cleaf (Democrat) moved for a committee of the primes with reference to the seating of the four Republicans from Hamilton County, but the motion was tabled by a vote of 17 to 16, the Democrats voting in the negative and the Republicans in the affirmative. The contest will be opened up again in some manner, if the contestants can succeed in getting authority to inquire into the legality and management of all witnesses called subject to the provisions of the bill, and to obtain the right to examine witnesses in other cases, and to take testimony in other cases, and to issue subpoenas and file pleadings, papers, agreements, briefs, and documents relating to matter under investigation, in the Ohio Valley and Southern States of the United States Courts. All complaints shall be made to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, who shall send the complaint to the committee, carrier, and require either satisfaction of the complaint or an answer to writing within a reasonable time specified. If requested, the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall issue subpoenas, and the witnesses shall be compelled to attend and testify, and be subject to the penalties provided for in R. S. 102 and 103 of the Revised Statutes, and the testimony taken in such cases shall be taken and returned to the House. The committee shall have power to send for persons and papers, and to administer oaths, and to do and perform all other matters and things required by the laws of the United States and the rules of the House of Representatives, and shall have power to report by bill or resolution, or otherwise, as may be deemed proper. Witnesses shall be entitled to the same fees as witnesses before the courts of the United States, and the expenses of the committee, carrier, and witnesses, shall be paid upon the certificate of the chairman of the committee, to be audited and paid as other claims against the United States are audited and paid. The committee shall have power to employ such clerks, stenographers, and other assistants as may be necessary, and to fix their compensation, which shall be paid as other claims against the United States are paid. The committee shall have power to administer oaths, and to do and perform all other matters and things required by the laws of the United States and the rules of the House of Representatives, and shall have power to report by bill or resolution, or otherwise, as may be deemed proper. In a two-column article headed "Now you've got it, now you haven't," the Boyne Statesman of last week starts in apparently to disprove our assertion of the suspicious appearance of fraud in the recent action of the board of supervisors, but instead of disproving anything, it simply repeats the school-boy's "you're another," by going off on a tangent in regard to the vote of South Arm township and charging frauds which, if proved, would cause the throwing out of the entire vote of the township. Now Mr. Statesman if you really believe these stories about voting dead men and boys, give us your assistance, and have the whole business investigated to the bottom. On the legality of the actions of certain township officers in this county statements supported by affidavit can be produced that would make mighty interesting reading. The Statesman does one good thing however, when it gives the names of those prominent men who "went round winking significant winks at each other." That sentence may be valuable in the future in proving the responsibility for the record transaction.

NOTES AND NEWS.

President Cleveland is now repaying congress in its own coin, for past hesitancy in confirming his appointments, by putting his veto to many of its recent bills. The admirers of of common sense in both parties, however, approve and support his course "all through." Few presidents have been placed in a more difficult position than is Cleveland, who is the national executive head of a party which has been out of power more than twenty years and who is obliged to endure the opposition of the powerful, but disappointed minority of the republican party. We say (not in a partisan sense, but because the merits of the man demand it) that, few if any men in the country could have "pursued the even tenor of their way" with the firmness and and justice which has characterized Cleveland's administration.—Eaton Rapids Journal.

A striker takes the first step toward outlawry and anarchy when he assumes that he has a right to prevent another man from doing the work which he himself declines to do. He takes another step when he by any sort of sophistry convinces himself that it is his right to take possession of or to interfere with the property of an individual or a corporation. He takes a third step when he ventures to put his own opinion or his own interpretation of what is right, under the law, against the order or the interpretation of those authorized to execute the law. He takes a fourth step and enters upon the border-lands of anarchy when he attempts to punish a workingman not a member of a union, and whose only crime is an effort to support his family by conscientious performance of duty.—Inter Ocean.

Owing to a change of time made by the Marquette, Houghton, & Ontonagon Railroad, connection is broken at Marquette, and passengers over the D. M. & M. R. R. for L'Anse, Baraga, Houghton, Hancock and Calumet arrive at Marquette after the departure of the "Houghton Express" on the latter road, and are thereby compelled to lose one day. The saving in fares and distance by this line as against any other to this region leaves it still the most desirable route. Close connections are still maintained for Negaunee, Ishpeming, Humboldt, Republic, Champion and Michigamme on west bound passenger, and all east bound passengers are assured of connections at every point.

On each recurring anniversary the Chicago Herald gives its readers a rich treat in newspaper curiosities. Last year they gave a fac simile of the famous wall paper edition of the Vicksburg Citizen, which Grant's soldiers issued immediately after his capture of the city; and this year he gives a fac simile of the Daily Chicago American of April 19, 1839, the first daily newspaper established in Chicago. In addition to its novelties, the Herald is a first-class newspaper and one we can recommend to every person desiring a clean, reliable newspaper.

If Mr. Powderley's suspicion should spread that tempting and causeless strikes are prompted by a desire of the strikers to get a living without work, and at the expense of their fellow workmen, there would be a speedy end to strikes. The assurance of support in idleness makes striking a great temptation and naturally leads to it in an occasion for a strike when none already exists. A well-grounded suspicion of that would make strikes unpopular.—Detroit Free Press.

The New York Tribune, which assumes to be the keeper of all the liberty there is in this country, and which is in a state of perpetual alarm lest some union soldier shall be unfairly treated, has a contemptible attack upon General Black, commissioner of pensions, in nearly every issue. Black draws a pension, is a democrat and an office-holder. If he had been a bounty-jumper and was a republican he would be a patriot in the eyes of the Tribune, whose editor took care not to expose himself to southern bullets.—Chicago Herald.

The soil of freedom is not favorable to the growth of communists and the mischievous loafers should be treated as pests of society, entitled to no consideration whatever. Stern, uncompromising action on the part of the police and the courts would soon rid the country of this intolerable nuisance of socialism, for its adherents are cowards at heart and only become formidable through the idle fears of others.—Saginaw Courier.

The Pall Mall Gazette seems to thoroughly understand the situation on this side of the Atlantic. It says "America is reaping the results of her folly in trying to make American citizens out of the scum of Europe." True, and it is time to commence the work of regeneration. The facility with which the scum of Europe is converted into a voting factor must be curtailed.—Saginaw Courier.

As long as colossal fortunes are piled up in a few years by capital, so long will labor clamor and demand, and eventually have more. The successful business men of the future will be the men who, as capitalists, take labor into their confidence and divide profits fairly.—Chicago Journal.

Alger's Aspirations.

"Majah" Osmun, Gov. Alger's private secretary, has been interviewed. He evidently wishes to speak authoritatively and perhaps he does so. Perhaps Gov. Alger really does not want to be United States senator. And then again, perhaps Gov. Alger does not want the public just yet to know that he would like to be United States senator. Probably, after all, "cenat" had better be spelled "cent." There is a strong suspicion lurking in the minds of of those who know Gov. Alger that his position is about according to the second conditional statement. Not long after he assumed the duties of governor he told the writer "it's too early to talk about that matter. I've got all I want to do in attending to the duties of my present position." If the semi-editorial bee was buzzing in Mr. Alger's bonnet when he secured the gubernatorial nomination, which is deemed an excellent stepping-stone, it is not wonderful that it buzzed quite loudly when Gov. Alger sat in the executive chamber at the capital. And is it unnatural to suppose that it so soon should have subsided as the time for for the contest can be reckoned by months? It is only a supposition, but sometimes suppositions are quite as true as they are peculiar.—Kalamazoo Gazette.

Democracy's Record.

When the national democratic party asked for the suffrages of the people, it promised an honest, economical and systematic government.

It has redeemed its pledge.

The party that two years ago through the frenzied orators declared that the election of a man known as a democrat, meant the destruction of the government and the deluded citizens, wise, believing them, voted against their interests can read this:

The balance sheet of the treasury department for the first nine months of this fiscal year shows an increase in the revenue of

It shows a decrease in expenditures of the government of $18,000,000.

More money has been collected, less money has been spent.

This is the democracy's record.—Kalamazoo Gazette.

Not Satisfied.

In many places where the eight hour plan has been adopted, the workmen are becoming dissatisfied with it and have expressed a desire to return to the old ten hour system. They say they cannot afford to lose the difference in wages.—Lansing Journal.

An Ancient Relic.

Mr. J. L. Alger showed us the other day a curiosity in the shape of an ancient razor, said to have been taken from an Indian grave north of the bay. The blade, much covered by rust, is a marvel of clumsiness. The handle is of tortoise shell and is much less injured by time and the elements than the blade. Upon one side of the handle is carved deeply "Father Marquette 1670." There is no doubt that the razor is of great age, and there is no doubt that the inscription was cut a great while ago, but we do not accept the theory that it was presented to Father Marquette in 1670. Our reason is this: In 1670 Father Marquette was working to build up the mission of St. Ignatius, north of the straits where St. Ignace now stands. Four years thereafter he left upon his famous expedition to the Mississippi and died on the return journey at or near the present site of Ludington. Now at the date of the inscription (1670) there were no other white men than Frenchmen in all this region. It was a hundred years later when the English penetrated to the region round Mackinac, and yet if this razor was presented to him at that time it was certainly presented by an Englishman. No Frenchman nor Indian would have used the title "Father" in place of his own "Pere." It is possible that it may have belonged to Father Marquette, was given by him to some Indian chief or Frenchman in 1670, and afterward came into possession of an English officer or trader, who, knowing its history, cut the inscription on it. The answer of the garrison at Fort Mackinac by the Indians, would account for its having fallen into the possession of an Indian, who, attaching a superstitious value to it, had it buried with him.—Petoskey Record.

An Editor's Sympathy.

Forty thousand parlorless clerks.

Forty thousand pink-white wars.
Forty thousand rigs, red tags.
Twenty thousand lonesome dears.
Forty thousand willing souls.
Forty thousand willing slaves.

Twenty thousand sudden graves.

P. You have our heartfelt sympathy, but we must draw the line at that.—Washington Critic.

The Great German Doctor.

The remarkable phase in the practice of Dr. Peter W. Cure for Piles.

Piles are frequently accompanied by a sense of weighty fullness, heat and tender part of the abdomen, causing the patient to imagine the seat of affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. Often, however, there are indigestion or general dyspepsia, flatulency, sensations of the stomach, costiveness, and the bowels are sometimes very disagreeable, feeling after purging as if there is a constant attendant. Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Bronnlee's Pile Remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure. Price 50 cents. Sold by Geo. W. Crosier.

Although the Independent never said a word regarding the Charlevoix county seat fight, realizing that it was none of our business, our personal sympathies were rather with Boyne City, from the fact that we have more personal friends there than at East Jordan. YOU ASK ME HOW I LIVE

BY R. H. T.

Living friendly, feeling friendly,
Acting fair to all men,
Seeking to do that to others
They ask me to do unto them,
Having no envy, scorning no man—
Whopping none in word or deed—
Just forgiving, scolding, serving,
Thus I live and this my creed.

Harsh condemning, fierce condemning
Is of little income worth;
One soft word of kindly praise
Is of more value on earth.
Calling blunders bad, calling sins bad
Little bad deeds no better might,
But how much happier the brother,
Let thy goodness be his light!

I have faith, and know how faithless
Is the world I live in, and yet—
Keys unless found are broken
Not an ear with gifts good lost;
Still, my heart, with kindness beaming,
Finds when other hearts are glad;
And my eyes a tear-drop finded
At the sight of others sad.

All to me—life—both as accept
For my happiness like this—
Kindly hearts are soldiers and cons—
Blessing ever brings its bliss;
Blessing others, blessing others,
Smile, though sad the smiler, could frown;
Man is man, we are all brothers,
Black or white, or red or brown.

Man is man, through all gradations,
Little reckon it where he stands—
Highest, lowest, midmost, nations,
Scattered over earth's broad lands;
Man is man, by form and feature,
Man by love and virtue, too—
Man, in all our common nature,
Speaks a common tongue in brotherhood.

REMINISCENCES.

BY CAPTAIN JAMES MONTFORD.

The ladies of the Colonel's family were "discussing" the war one evening.

One proof of the strong effect the war had upon the popular mind is that it is often, even to-day, the subject of conversation in numerous families.

It is not the wonder of nine days, or nine years, but the needless loss of a generation.

The Colonel's wife had imbibed a great share of his opinions, and she was almost as good a soldier—to talk—as the worthy Colonel himself.

"No," she said, in response to some suggestion from her niece, "the Colonel does not think the Southern women were worse in war-time than those of the North would have been under similar circumstances."

"Perhaps he really does not think so," said the young lady, "but he always leans that way."

Well, here he comes. He can argue it out with you himself."

A moment later footsteps approached the door and the Colonel entered.

"We have been criticising your stories, papa," said his daughter, "and exactly thinks you are rather hard on the ladies."

"I do not intend to be. I merely relate my stories just as they came dimmedly."

"The only way you can make amends is to tell another story, where the ladies are better disposed," cried his niece, smilingly.

"Oh, Jim," thought Charley, "that accounts for all those lights back there."

"I dem think so," drawled the other black. "De Major am a fighter, I tell yo', if dem Lambees do come, dey'll catch it."

"Charley moved cautiously back, and was soon out of hearing. Then he began to consider the case.

"It was quite evident to him that an officer of the Confederate army was in the farm-house. Should he (Charley) hurry back to camp, and give warning of the Major's presence in the country? That would be quite a nice commencement for him, he thought; but, then, the officer had left his home to meet his wife and family. They would be safer near him, too.

He had at last concluded to allow matters to take their proper course, when he heard the sound of horses' hoofs, and a few minutes later several mounted men rode up to the house.

The negroes left their position in front of the stable, and ran toward the house. Soon after, the sound of angry voices reached Charley's ear, and he came around in front of the house.

"At the side of the house he saw the horsemen now upon the ground; there was a handsome young gentleman in their midst.

"He was evidently the Major of whom the darkies had spoken; but Charley could not understand why his humorous words—they were so uniformed.

"An old, gray-haired gentleman, the Major's father, evidently, several women and servants gathered about. Charley saw several rods away, and was unable to hear or understand what was going forward, but at last all the company entered the house.

"The Charley Johnston's right the mystery, and stole noiselessly to the house. The windows were open, and, as he crept close to the side of the building, he was delighted to make out all one of the conversation so acquired, he was not ashamed to listen.

"A great deal of high talk took place. The men were Southerners and neighbors, but were ill-affected in the Confederacy. Their leader, a large man, with a good, jour-looking countenance, was the Major's guest, and had seized him as a means of revenge.

"As Charley learned this, one of the captors came to the door to look after the horses, and he was driven back in the direction of the stable.

"He was determined not to leave the place without paying himself for the trouble of the visit, and he no sooner spied a number of fowls which roosted upon a short piece of fence at the side of the stable than he grasped one.

"He did not scare him very firmly, for, with a squack, he escaped from his hands and flew fluttering along the ground.

"Charley ran into the stable, the negroes had left the doors open, and, thinking it would be less trouble to find him in the barn than to take another from the fowls, he pursued him inside.

"After a troublesome search the rooster was a prisoner, and Charley was about to quit the premises in haste when a woman entered the stable.

"Charley saw her enter; she was one of the ladies he had seen in the house, and was doubtless the Major's wife.

"She was bareheaded and seemed in haste. Charley tried to escape her observation, but she saw him at once.

"Why, Jim, I'm glad" she demanded, in a tremulous whisper.

"A friend."

"If you are, old man, saddle the horse," and she pointed to a mountaineer's saddle stood in a stall directly behind the adventurer.

"The latter hesitated for a moment. He imagined the horse was for the Major's escape.

"The woman understood what was passing in his mind, and her face became pale as death.

"I'll help you," cried Charley at last.

"The woman uttered a cry of joy, and a moment later a saddle was placed upon the nag, and Charley led him softly from the stable.

"Quick as thought the woman sprang into the saddle, and spurring the horse around the side of the barn disappeared.

"At that instant there came a confused if from the direction of the house, and, rising, Charley saw the captors rushing around the stable.

"They poured a volley of questions at Charley, and he was forced to lie to save a general opinion among the troops that he was to put a period to the Confederacy.

"The first impression certainly was when we went on board the little steamer, and when forced to disgorge the most choice contents of our knapsacks. This forced yielding up of the treasures we had humbled caused a little discontent, but it soon wore off.

"The next day after boarding the steamer we arrived at Old Point Comfort, and our ships weighed anchor and the ruins of the once beautiful village of Hampton.

"We were soon pressed for food at that time, but many, partly excited by the strangeness and beauty of the country, partly by the idea that rests upon the soldier that he deserves something moderable, wandered about in search of whatever they might devour.

"Late one afternoon Charley Wise started out alone.

"He was a tall, well-made fellow; strong as a mule, quick witted, and vendetta-some in a degree. He was just left the camp for behind, and, wandering around, lost his way, just as darkness set in.

"This disturbed Charley very little, and as he came in sight of a brightly illuminated farm house he resolved to enter the premises, and if he could pick up anything he wanted, he should. If he failed, he might in this way lack to camp.

"As he advanced he saw that the building was large and well supported. There were no musical manifestations of light, and he guessed that some festivities were in progress.

"Entering the orchard, which was upon the left side of the building, he made his way cautiously around behind the back of the house, where he supposed, the outbuildings were situated.

"He discovered the stable and its appendages at last, but was forced to take a roundabout course to reach it. Reaching the front corner of the building, he suddenly found that further progress in that direction was cut off.

"Two darkies sat upon the steps of the stable.

"Glancing around the corner, Charley could barely distinguish their forms.

"Forcing discovery—gentlemen engaged in business similar to Charley's were occasionally caught, and roughly used—he stood quiet for a moment.

"The negroes were talking together, and, being but a few paces distant, their words were plainly audible to our adventurer.

"'Major am hoppy lately,' one was saying, 'but I heard Massar Sim say dat he run great risks in comin' here to-night.'

"'Dem lies,' thought Charley, 'that accounts for all those lights back there.'

"'I dem think so,' drawled the other black. 'De Major am a fighter, I tell yo', if dem Lambees do come, dey'll catch it.'

"Charley moved cautiously back, and was soon out of hearing. Then he began to consider the case.

PICTURESQUE CAVES.

One of the Wonders of Nature Found in Southern Oregon.

The new discovery is a multiplicity of grotesque and fantastic-looking objects of nature's fashioning. Persons of lively imagination can, out of the scenery, make perfect in their ideas almost any archetype, and many different parts of many different animals. The numerous chambers and many narrow passages with different shaped, fashioned, and molded scenery are surprising and astonishing. A man can go through what is discovered, and also go through it; the writer has gone through part of the discovery, but he believes that no one person who does go through it has a mind large enough to take in and hold all that is to be seen in that arcadian formation. Large with large, brilliant burning flames to emanate streams of light on the surroundings were placed there, the sights would be dazzling. To answer white and wax-colored statuette, and in grottoes that cover the sides can not be represented in language. The wax-colored and vitreous statuette pendants hanging from the lower extremity reflect flashes of the light, and when the burning candles are held still the visitors behold the spectacle in all its innumerable splendors.

The incrustations on the bottom of some of the chambers include patches of a radiant tourfrost, which is so hard and sharp that it makes prints in the bootsoles; but its glistening in the candle-light is like a body of newly fallen snow when the early sunbeams strike it in the morning air. There are imitation sponges that look soft and velvety, but hard and sharp to the touch of the hand; imitation coral and coral fringes of very beautiful shapes and colors; a body of stalagmite resembling the snow-clad Mount Hood and the ghost chamber that came near scaring the life out of the cave man when he discovered it.

Before entering into the big chamber there is overhead a vertical aperture that seems to run up the distance of thirty feet, and all the way it seems to have the same diameter. A strong current of air spins through, and visitors have to take extra care of their lights or they may lose them. The big chamber is well named. It is a spacious underground room, being 350 feet long, 50 feet wide, its vaulted roof rising to a height of from 50 to 75 feet, and its size imposing to the beholder. Its sides and roof consist of rock, differing from any other cave chamber that the writer has seen; enormous bowlders cover the bottom, and on the shelly sides bunches of gravel are scattered, and many curiously colored pebble stones.—Grant's Pass Courier.

Tea Cultivation in Japan.

The tea-plant, like many other plants, can not be transplanted or uninjured by a frost or frosts, and it must be raised from the seeds. It requires a temperate climate, too great heat or cold injures the plant. The best time for sowing is from December to the end of January. The seeds are placed in circles, slightly covered with earth, over which a layer of tea-husks is spread in order to protect them against the hoar-frost. The first shoots appear in the following May or June, the roots developing in proportion to the plant. If the seeds are sown late, the roots have not time to expand before the rising of the stem, which injures permanently the future growth of the shrub. No manure is required during the first twelve months after the appearance of the plant. During the second year animal manure dilute in an equal amount of water is applied. From the third year the stem is surrounded three times yearly with pure animal manure or oil-cake, i. e. the refuse of the oil-press. At the end of the third year the stem shrub is topped, in order to increase the power of forming lateral buds.

The first leaves are gathered in the fourth year. The harvest commences in the beginning of the summer, when only the youngest leaves are picked, thirty days after the first gathering the second takes place. Some tea growers have lately made a third picking, in consequence of the rise in the price of tea, but this proceeding ought to be energetically discountenanced, as it has proved most injurious to the plant.

The leaves, immediately after having been gathered, are taken to the factory. The tea-plant contains an diastase, and thus unlike other plants of the order of the Terutrocomopsis, which are usually exstipulate. Here the stipules are separated by means of a bamboo sieve, and all impurities are removed. In this done, the leaves are exposed to the action of steam, by placing them on a bamboo hurdle over water heated to 200 degrees F. in a covered pan. These intended for the black-tea are steamed for fifteen seconds, those intended for green tea for a minute. After cooling, the tea is rolled by means of a machine, which is driven by means of fans.

The leaves, when perfectly dry, are removed from the second Roiro into pieces of copper pan, in which the petioles, which may have remained attached, are separated by gentle rubbing between the palms of the hands. After having been winnowed, the leaves are sorted into different qualities, and sifted through bamboo sieves, of which there are six different degrees of fineness. Common tea is sifted but once, the better qualities from six to seven times, and the purchaser tea even as often as ten times, which exquisiture in time and labor renders this kind of tea extremely dear.

The tea-leaves, after having been prepared for use in the manner above described, are in June exposed to the action of a gentle fire for several hours, then spread out in a flat pan and

WHEN placed under a microscope the sting of a bee presents a polish of dazzling beauty; and when placed in the end of a man's nose the polish is unequaled. It makes him cut on the edge of the town that needs some proof of a strong arm. Most Texas druggists keep a few centipedes and tarantulas preserved in alcohol as a kind of an attraction. Although you sending the desperado in many other respects, when the centipede is in liquor he is calm and genteel, and it is perfectly safe to make remarks about him. When the desperado is in whisky he is apt to resent familiarities, otherwise there is not much to choose between them, except that the centipede can't shed off a gallon of whisky and defy the local authorities. This goes to show that like causes do not always produce the same effect.

The centipede is not a very active insect, and he is not much of a vocalist, but the quantity of latent energy and the spasmodic flow of old genoa that he can coax out of the most quiet of men is surprising. When he seizes the unfortunate victim with his jaws, another his two hooks in his flesh, and, humming himself, climbs his numerous sharp-pointed toes, the geology in that part of the country, and also the fourth commandment, is liable to be wrecked by the violence of the behavior of the occasional sufferer. It is a fact, however, that very few persons die from the bite of the centipede. It is the centipede that dies.

The centipede has a worse enemy than man. It is a bird with a long bill and a topknot, whose mission seems to be to decrease the leading tourist species. The bird is called by some the ring-tailed cock, by others the road runner. The Mexicans call him el correpatl, or the corporal. Why the Mexicans give the bird a military title I can't tell. Perhaps it is on account of his topknot, or, more plausible still, because he can run so fast. The corporal in the Mexican army is almost as hard to overtake as a deserter, and the road runner is remarkable for his speed. He can carry points to an accounting bank cashier. He runs like pronunciamiento on a note of hand.

Well, this world-be reformer regards the centipede as an offensive partisan, and he knows from experience that the centipede finds himself in a distressing minority. Although the centipede is copiously provided with legs, one road runner can run faster than all the centipedes in the State of Texas.

When the road runner, or chapparal cock, overtakes an offensive partisan of a centipede he seizes the obnoxious insect by the head and gives him a shake or two sufficient to knock the life in a cellar motion this reformer passes the centipede through his mouth, and, pretty much as a linen collar is passed through a patent clothes-wringer, and lets him drop on the sidewalk. After that the centipede is desirable of political aspirations. He makes a fine footstool for a gentleman who is crushed. Then the bird glides by the centipede outways, very much after the manner of an Italian lazaroni hiding away a few feet of macaroni.

One Sunday morning a colored clergyman was preaching with great fervor in the Austin Tiger Tabernacle on the worldliness of mankind. He said, earnestly: "Do brudder wid de most ob you niggahs an dat you hab got yer eyes wuss on de things ob de yarf. Delighted brethren and sistern, look at de things what am above, and do Lord will send down blessing on yer heads."

As he muttered these words he rolled up his eyes until the whites, or rather the yellows, alone were visible; but all at once, "a change came o'er the spirit of his dream," and with the yell of a dehabled Sioux yesterday he ran forward to the pulpit of the pence he bounded into the aisle, where, as pain in a piece of aged tripe, his legs vibrating with terror, which also straightened out the kinks of his wool. He pounced upward, and in a tremulous voice exclaimed: "Lawd, jus look at dat ar crawsed insect."

Sure enough, slowly crawling over the ceiling just above the sacred desk, was a green centipede of about the size of a primitive table knife. He was liable to drop down on the congregation at any moment, instead of the promised benediction. This is about the only time I ever heard of anybody looking up to a centipede.—Alex. Sweet.

A GOAT FARM.

A New York Lady's Venture Which Has Proved Profitable.

Three miles from the village of Nyack, near the Hudson river, is an Angora goat farm, which from its novelty attracts much attention. It is looked upon as nothing in the nature of a farmer's ranch, like the raising of bees or silkworms. Goats browse and goats prosper on this farm on the heights that border Rockland Lake as readily as they do, on the rocks about Shantytown, in New York City. But they are a different breed of goats, more aristocratic than their city relatives as to wool, more epicurean in their tastes, and more blue-blooded as to ancestry. The herd in this somewhat novel farm just now numbers seventy-five, varying in age from the tiny object of 3 months which looks like a cross between a dog, a rabbit, and a lady's powder puff, to the handsome patriarch of the flock, a magnificent specimen of the pure Angora breed, with immense curling horns. This handsome old fellow with his wife were imported by Dr. Agnew, the famous oculist of New York, from Asia Minor, and the importation cost him a heap of money as the price of goats goes. Their present owner is the good woman who now runs this goat farm, and who never tires of discanting upon the good qualities of her pets. They know her voice, and answer to their names when she calls them. Kind and gentle they appear when visitors are about, but the kindness for fighting, as characteristic of goats as it is of a native of Tipperary, crops out when the bell is together and apparently out of sight of mankind.

A strange fact noticed in the breeding of these animals is that the females do not thrive in this locality as well as the males. The hardy female goat of the ordinary species was introduced into this flock for experimental breeding purposes, and with marked success. Repeated crossings with the common goat and her offspring has produced apparently pure Angora goats, the tendency being in all cases for the kids to revert in the texture of their wool toward the male side. As a consequence the third generation has all the appearance of its distinguished ancestry, and in the fourth generation even the best experts can not tell the pure-blooded from the grade Angora. This fact is a matter of considerable interest to breeders of goats, as an Angora buck costs $100 or over, while the common goat can be had almost for the asking. The fecundity of the Angora is not so great as that of the common goat, the Angora ewe giving birth to but one kid yearly.

As a source of profit the goats have turned out well. The wool is from four to six inches in length, silky and of beautiful texture. A full-grown animal will yield four pounds of wool, which will readily sell at $1 per pound. Just now the demand for this wool is not particularly lively, as the lustrous dress fabric into which it was at one time largely converted is out of vogue with fashionable ladies. It is therefore used almost exclusively in the manufacture of plush for upholstery purposes. When the kid is 6 months old its kids, undressed, is worth $3, and will sell readily for that amount to glove manufacturers. Kids on the farm in question meet with sudden death on that account at about that age with considerable regularity. When it is necessary to kill them the good lady has them chloroformed so that she may not hear the death cries of her little pets. The milk of the goat is much sought after by dyspeptics, by persons suffering from pulmonary troubles, and by otherwise delicate persons, and it brings a much greater price than cows' milk. As to their use for food little can be said, because the goat does not flesh up well, but the kid, when killed young, furnishes a fair amount of tender meat which some people like. It will never become a great delicacy in the market, or be in sufficient demand to become a source of income to the goat-raiser. There is nothing in the world so cheap to raise as goats, because they will find ample food in lots up here where other animals would starve to death. Acorns are a favorite article of food with them, and as these abound in the woods the cost for winter fodder is mainly confined to the trouble of gathering the acorns.—N. Y. Times.

An Aged Art Student.

The atrocity of some of the drawings makes it difficult sometimes for M. Professor to find anything to say, but I have only once seen a master absolutely silenced by bad work. On Monday morning, on arriving at the studio, we were all much surprised to see a very old woman in the heaviest widow's weeds, in the act of trying to arrange an easel. We concluded that she was making preparations for some grandchild, or, as her age could not have been far short of 90, some great grandchild even; but to our astonishment it soon became evident that she had not been working in the interests of age descendants, for she climbed nimbly enough on her stool, produced a curtou and a sheet of common brown paper, and began to draw. She made the quaintest figure possible on the top of her high stool, in her poke bonnet and long cloak, and with her rusty old umbrella hanging on the back of her easel.

Every one was laughing to see her work; the general rumor was that in her day she had been 'excessively forte," and was coming to amuse herself in her old age, as a veteran jollies up the old sword which he will never wield again. For the first two days it was impossible to find out what her drawing was like. We used to see nothing but the big bonnet nodding backward and forward, and a little knotted claw in a black mitten moving industriously over the sheet of brown paper. ''any one approached the corner in which she had established herself, a long pallid nose would emerge from the recesses of the bonnet, and a pair of bright eyes would be anxiously fixed upon the intruder, while the little claw would furtively draw a piece of white paper over the study on which it had been so busily engaged. One day, however, the opportunity came to me. The old lady dropped her crayon holder, and I picked it up before she had time to get down for it. I talked to her a few minutes, and at last plucked up heart to remark that "doubtless Madame had already studied a great deal?" "Hut, mademoiselle," was the reply, "I only now begin. I wish to copy at the Louvre, and it is always well to learn to draw a little before beginning." At this point my curiosity got the better of my politeness, and, stepping behind her easel I saw her work. She had drawn in the figure with ordinary lead pencil. She had picked out the nostrils and lips with red chalk, and in the center of each eye was a dazzling pip of white. Every law of proportion had been unanimiously violated; it was absolutely bad, and she was waiting for my criticism. I was dumb; no words came to my rescue; but at length I framed a gentlemanly compliment and was beginning to stammer out in response to her pathetic look of inquiry, when the sudden arrival of the professor sent me back to my own easel, and I was spared the utterance. We all watched him as he came up to the old lady. I knew what he was suffering. Had I not endured it myself a moment before? He gazed at the drawing, than at the bonnet, then at the drawing again. He was a tender hearted young man and reverenced old age, but the situation was too much for him. He glared alsstractedly round the room for inspiration, and, finding none, he managed to gasp out a wild, "Continuo, madam," and literally turned and ran. The old lady looked rather disappointed, but she applied herself to her drawing, and at the end of the week she departed and did not return. We heard that she thought the professor's comments not very useful, and so went straight to the Louvre.—Magazine of Art.

Feed for Unnursed Infants.

Speaking of the Congo region Mr. Rice, a missionary, says: "The resources of the region are great and mainly undeveloped. Perhaps half of this vast territory is virgin forest of great thickness and value. Wherever I have been the great rubber wealth of the country is yet untouched. This will be accessible as soon as the natives find there is a market for it somewhere on the river. Considering that at present the rubber supply of America is inadequate, it is plain that sooner or later this equatorial supply will be tapped and immense fortunes realized. The quantity of ivory which lies unused and is, comparatively speaking, of no value in this region is untold."

Feed for Unnursed Infants.

In August, 1885, the Prairie Farmer published the following formula for feeding cow's milk to infants which is published in the JOURNAL by request, for the benefit of those interested. Cut it out and save it.

"First, good milk from healthy cows is to be used. That from cows in the first two or three months after dropping their calves is preferable. The milk, in all cases, is to stand in a cool place about five hours. For the first month the upper one-eighth of the milk is to be taken, which will secure much the larger percentage of cream. After the first month, the upper third only of the milk is to be used. For the first three months the food is to be given once in two hours. After that the period between feedings may be increased. The last column gives the amount of the mixture of milk and water to be consumed each 24 hours, by the average child:

Legal Notice.

Maj. Gassaway, a prominent San Antonio lawyer, succeeded in obtaining the acquittal of a horse thief, who was tried in the district Court in and for the county of Bexar.

"Major," said the acquitted man, "I don't know how to pay you for the near kindness. I haven't got any money just now."

"Well now that you are foot-loose again you will soon have some money, or horses which is just as good, but in the meantime you mention my name to other members of the gang and friends, in case they need the services of an attorney in any of the frontier counties," said the lawyer.

"I'll do it, major. You shall have all our business."—Texas Siftings.

The Boston police have determined to prevent to the future the demoralizing presence of parties at ball games on Sunday. The barber shops are to be closed.

There is intense excitement at Portland, Me., on the settlement of the schooner Ella M. Doughty by the Canadian authorities. The Fish Exchange adopted resolutions declaring that the United States should proclaim non-intercourse with Canada in all matters pertaining to fisheries; asking the National government to send armed cruisers into Canadian waters to protect American vessels; and calling upon Congress to take such action as will protect American from seizure of their property while in the act of trade by the colonial government, and to demand an immediate release of the vessels under seizure. This resolution was adopted: "Resolved, That if our Government refuses to send immediately armed vessels to protect our vessels, we deem it expedient to arm and equip our vessels for their protection." A telegram from Lord Pontlevel in the fishing grounds, to-day, arrived.

WESTERN.

Captain Hatfield, with a troop of United States cavalry, surprised and stampeded the camp of Geronimo, near Santa Cruz, Intimpanine, through a cause soon afterward he suffered the loss of two men killed and three wounded. Major Blue, with a large Mexican force, has since joined in the pursuit.

Engineer Gleim, of the Sonora Land and Cattle Company, of Chicago, arrived at El Paso, Tex., and more than confirmed the reported structure of Geronimo and his band of Apaches. He says he has sent out scouting parties who have been murdered, and reports seen twenty Geronimo, so large have been sacred, while over fifty Mexican families were fleeing for their lives.

John Dewey, the famous plow manufacturer of Moline, Ill., aged eighty-two years, died last week. Edward I. Meacham, formerly of a plow company at South Bend, Ind., expired from consumption.

It is considered certain that the men who robbed the express car on the East Island Railroad some time ago and murdered Sellers Nichols, the messenger, will soon be in the custody of the authorities. The fugitives have been located in a small village not far from Joliet, and have been fully identified by Orrin Austin, a farmer living in Kendall County, Ill., a few miles from Morris, where they took breakfast on the Sunday after the crime was committed.—Boston Journal.

POLITICAL.

The session of Congress is so far advanced now that some question has been raised as to the calling up of the tariff bill at this session, reports a Washington dispatch. It has been suggested by some people that Colonel Morrison intended to let his bill rest until next winter, when the Congressional elections would have passed, and when he could have the whole session for the discussion of the bill, but all the speculation about the postponement of the matter is idle. The bill will be called up when the other business of the House will admit of it without the interfering too much with appropriation bills. A tariff bill takes precedence of everything. THE INDUSTRIAL OUTLOOK

Telegrams to Bradstreet's indicate that the industrial situation in favor of business' work daily has largely disappeared from view. The fact is, however, that it has been a practical failure, while at Chicago the attitude of manufacturers in several leading lines is looking out some 47,000 employees who demanded a shorter working day, remains in the forefront of the movement. Supplementary reports show that within about two weeks there have been strikes in industrial centres to the extent of fifty daily hours of labor aggregating 200,000 employes, that 150,000 have secured concessions without striking, and that not over 47,000 of the 200,000 strikers have secured their ends. MAXWELL'S YARN.

The St. Louis Murderer Makes a Statement of the Circumstances of the Crime.

He Gave Prellor Chloroform in Medical Treatment—The Fatal Result.

St. Louis dispatch:

St. Louis newspapers print a statement made by H. H. Brooks, alias Maxwell, now on trial for the murder of C. Arthur Prellor, which will constitute his only defense, and which will be urged by his attorneys in the main. In a word, he will confess to killing Prellor by accident, while acting as his physician, and that, being excited and frightened, he concealed, instead of making known the fact of death. He declares he has always wanted to tell the facts, and only refrained by advice of his attorneys. The following is Brooks' statement:

"Mr. Prellor was suffering from an acute malady, for which I had previously prescribed, using the medicine myself from the bottles in the medicine chest I carried with me, but his illness had reached a stage when it was necessary for me to perform an operation. Brooks then takes of the purgatives and the chloroform, which was applied in the usual manner. Brooks then says: "I was called upon to administer

Does It Pay?

Let us admit that a high protective tariff creates certain manufactures and that without such a tariff there would be none. What are the compensations and what are the losses?

The visible results of this kind of industry are tremendous aggregations of capital and immense communities of workingmen, women, and children, mostly drawn from the overcrowded centers of Europe. Of late years the tendency has been to more and more luxury on the part of employers and deeper and deeper degradation on the part of employes. According to the census of 1890 three-fourths of the people employed in our manufacturing industries are of foreign birth, in scores of places where factories abound the life of the people is not American. They speak no English They are unsympathetic with our government, our politics, our history, or our literature. Thousands of them have been assisted to come here by employers anxious to secure labor at its cheapest rate. They have lowered the standard of living, and by their fierce competition they have driven from the very pursuits which they now follow the American born or reared workers who cannot meet them on equal terms.

The American mechanic was at his best when the tariff was for revenue. Assuming that it has been the protective tariff which has built up these great shops, brought these hosts of aliens here and established an industrial system which has proved a moral and political cancer, it may well be asked, in view of the unpleasant disclosures now made almost daily, if we have not a little too much tariff, too much "American labor" of a certain kind and too many smoke-stack monuments to government pampered industry. Production that is natural and healthful does not decrease its labors. If there are certain things which Europe, with its beggared populations, can produce and sell to us cheaper than we can make them ourselves why not let them do it?—Chicago Herald.

Is the Boycott Legal?

MILWAUKEE, May 21.—A suit preparing which will make its appearance in the courts within a few days promises to be of much importance to business men and the laboring classes, inasmuch as it will decide the question of liability of individual members of labor unions for damages sustained by a firm against whom the union may have conducted a boycott. The suit referred to is to be brought by H. Segnitz & Co., proprietors of a large cigar factory, against members of the executive board of the Knights of Labor of this district. About two months ago the Knights of Labor began a boycott against Segnitz & Co., and since that time have at intervals issued and distributed circulars in which the cigar manufacturers were accused of having violated an agreement with the Knights of Labor, discharged Knights and filled their places with men not members of the order and other things objectionable to the labor organization. Segnitz & Co., have letters from cigar dealers in which the latter refuse to handle the Segnitz cigars, as the boycott against the firm will prevent a sale of goods. Mr. Segnitz and his attorney are satisfied that no action for damages can be sustained under rulings of the supreme court.

Still They Come.

A gentleman just arrived at Boston indulges in some lugubrious reflections over the fact that on the steamer which gave him passage were more than twelve hundred immigrants, of whom he made special study during the voyage. Not one-third had friends or acquaintances in the country to meet them; not one fourth could speak or read the English language; not one-tenth had money sufficient to support them three months without immediate employment. On inquiry he learned that they were all destined for the west and northwest; that they all expected employment at much higher wages than in their native countries, and that, with very few exceptions, they had been induced to emigrate through the representations and at the solicitation of the steamship and railway agents abroad.

In justice to these people themselves, as well as those already here, it is not true to tell the truth about American labor? Its competition is cheaper than that abroad. Its demands are more onerous. Its rewards are daily becoming less, owing to this enormous influx from abroad. If the United States is to continue much longer to be an asylum for the oppressed of all nations, speculators in and promoters of assisted immigration must give pause until the present plethora is reduced. Just now, with 2,000,000 to 3,000,000 of unemployed, we are suffering from an embarras de richesse in this direction.—Chicago News.

Judge Withey's Successor.

The people of Western Michigan seem well pleased over the appointment of Henry F. Severens, of Kalamazoo, as United States Circuit Judge of the Western Judicial Circuit. He is the law partner of Julius C. Burrows.

Judge Henry F. Severens was born at Rockingham, Vt., May 11, 1838. After a preparatory education he entered Middlebury College in 1858, graduating in 1861. He then accepted the position of principal of Saxtin's River Seminary for two years, after which he entered upon the study of law with the Hon. H. E. Stoughton, of Bellows Falls, Vt. In 1863 Judge Severens was admitted to the bar, and in 1865 emigrated to Michigan, locating at Three Rivers, where he immediately entered upon the practice of his profession. One year later he was chosen prosecuting attorney of St. Joseph county, which position he held for two years. In 1868 he removed to and formed a law partnership with Charles E. Stuart and J. M. Edwards, of Kalamazoo. In 1887 he withdrew from the firm and formed a copartnership with Julius C. Burrows, which continued until Mr. Burrows was elected to congress in 1872. The partnership was then dissolved, only to be renewed again a few years later, and has since been continued. In 1876 Judge Severens was the democratic liberal candidate for congress against the late Hon. Chas. Upson, and in 1877 was the democratic candidate for judge of the supreme court.

In the mountains to the eastward of Santa Ana, Cal., and extending for more than thirty miles in the different canons, are numerous bee ranches, producing in a good season hundreds of tons of excellent honey.

Georgians point with pride to David Sargent of Hall county. He is a vigorous native of 55 years, and walked twenty-two miles the other day, and said he could just as well as not have walked ten miles farther.

Senator Ingalls is an ardent lover of nature. It is not unusual for him to start off on a tramp across the Maryland and Virginia hills alone, and it is his boast that he frequently walks twenty miles on a bright clear day.

Birmingham, England, still makes flintlock muskets for use in the interior of Africa, where percussion caps or any form of fixed ammunition would often be impossible to obtain, while powder can always be made, and flints picked up in the desert.

Lawrence, Kas., claims to have a coal vein eighteen inches thick, with a sandstone roof, at a depth of 160 feet, while David Inger, living seven miles northeast of Peabody, while boring a well on his farm, struck a vein of coal at a depth of fifty feet.

In Webster county, Georgia, lives Isaac Wilkinson, who has a daughter, aged twenty-three, strangely deformed. Her head and body are well developed, but her arms and legs are short, like a turtle's flippers. She is twenty-six inches in height when standing.

The invention of the type-writer dates as far back as 1714, when one Henry Mill obtained in England a patent for a device that "carries in printed characters, one at a time and one after another," but it was not until 1867 that it was improved so as to work satisfactorily.

There is a man in Colorado who is said to have fallen heir to a fortune of $500,000. He is the only surviving relative of a man named Smith, who recently died in England. He is just identifying his book 588 some member of the Smith family should conclude to test his right to it.

Mrs. Cornelius, the divorcee in the Dilke case, is a very pretty woman, as to her sister, the widow of the late Ashton Dilke, Sir Charles' brother. Sir Charles' first wife was also a remarkably beautiful woman, an Irish lady, a Miss Shell. He has an only son by her, now 17 years old.

There is a vast difference in the amounts asked for and the amounts offered before the Canadian Board of Niagara Falls Arbitrators. Mr. Bush, for instance, thinks he ought to have $1,000,000, and the commissioners offer $27,000. There is a good deal of margin there for a compromise.

In his lecture before the Boston Scientific Society the other evening Dr. Kneeland gave the latest prices for wives among the Santhal people. If the woman is young and pretty the husband must pay in her relative from $6 to $5. Middle-aged women are quoted at about $1.50 and widows at 75 cents each.

Martin Frey, of Marietta, Ga., tried a new way of catching rats. He took a keg and filled it about half full of water and placed cotton seed on top of the water, which floated on the surface. He then sprinkled meal on top of the cotton seed and placed the keg in his barn. Next morning he emptied his keg of 180 drowned rats.

Several service teachers have found a counterfeiter's press which can be put into a market basket, and yet will crush the bartered silver to a ragged film in operation is so easy and silent that the band of a child can strike off coins from plancheites under its dies, and no sound of its movement will be heard two yards away.

There are probably more theaters painted white in Philadelphia than in any other city in the world; the idea was started by Haverly, who thought that white was a lucky color. It is also said that actors prefer to play in a theater painted white. If things go on in this way Philadelphia will soon be known as the white city.

A particular friend in Yokohama wrote to his correspondent in Piymouth: "Please to omit the word 'Esquire' at the end of my name, and direct my letters to Jenkins Johnson without any tail. By the return of mail came a reply directed in precise accordance with the request of the particular friend, to Jenkins Johnson without any tail."

John Stetson, the New York manager, is somewhat cross-eyed. On occasion he advertised a certain play with "a remarkably strong cast." Laura Don, the actress, witnessed the performance and was asked what she thought of it. "Well," she replied miserably, "I think the remarkably strong cast' is all in the manager's eye."

New invention begets new words. The telegraph has a numerous family already, but a correspondent now suggests that an addition be made to it. Writing from the Junior Atheneum Club, W. H. C. says: "A new word is wanted more suggestive of brevity than the phrase 'telegraphic address' now being inscribed on our cards and notepaper. How would 'telenym' do?"

The etymology of many Americanisms is impossible to discover. "Bas" is taken from the Dutch "baas," or master, and is quite legitimate. "Boom," some clever person says, is derived from the nautical phrase "to boom out," as applied to a vessel bearing before the wind; and the origin of "blizzard" is enveloped in obscurity, and "bull-dozer" has vanquished all the etymologists in turn.

New York Town Topics says that, according to a letter from London, at a recent social event there Canon Farrar, who was one of the guests, was asked how he found America as a country to travel in. "Excellent," he replied. "I can scarcely conceive how it could be improved in any way. The better I can scarcely conceive how it could be improved in any way. The better I know them the more I feel the attentive that one could almost do without a valet."

An impulsive American in England asked a member of the Prince of Wales' household what the Prince read. "Nothing," was the answer. The American was incredulous, but the Englishman went on to say that the Prince never opened a book or a newspaper. Omniscient secretaries read everything that the Prince should know, and the result is related to him in condensed form.

The complexions of the German races have been studied of late by Professor Virchow, who reports that 32 per cent of the German yeuths are blonde—that is, have light hair, blue eyes and fair skin; 14 per cent are brunettes, while 54 per cent show some mixture of these types. The proportion of blondes is largest in the North, especially in Oldenburg, rarest in Bavaria and Alsace. Of German Jews one in ten is a true blonde.

Housekeeping in Japan has few trials, according to a lady writing from that country. She says: "If she not visit my kitchen once a month, never give an order outside of a spoken wish, yet the domestic machinery moves with an ease and perfection unattainable at home by almost any effort on the part of the mistress. The manners of the servants are amusing, not to say startling. Every night at bedtime our five retainers appear, prostrate themselves in succession to the earth, and retire. This is to wish me good night and to renew their testimony of profound respect and pleasure over the privilege of serving me.

On Monday John Myers resigned his position as foundryman for the Pine Lake Iron Co., a position which he has held for five years. We are informed that during his connection with the company "he has made a better grade of iron than any other man on the job, if he is a German." He went to Elk Rapids for a visit on Thursday.

One of the best evidences of a skilled workman (or woman) in any industry is the amount of work they have to do at fair prices. Mrs. A. L. McLeod, dressmaker, so completely fills the bill in her line that she and her assistant, Miss Aldrich, are compelled to work hard early and late to keep up with orders. She manages to turn out a large amount of work on time, and guarantees satisfaction.

Last Thursday afternoon, A. J. McLeod's pointer took a notion to play while being unhitched from the carriage, and ran out to the street and started around the block. As they turned the corner at McCabe's, Anna and Bertie McLeod saw them, and rushed into the street to stop them. They succeeded in checking them enough to grab the lines, and hold on until they finally stopped. One of them gave Anna a lively whirl but she refused to let go.

By the misplacing of the steamer Van Raalte's gang plank at Cross Village last Friday, nine sacks of feed, truck, Capt. Gebos, a wheelbarrow, and other truck was precipitated into 18 feet of water. The remarkable phase in the practice of Dr. Peter W. Schmidt (frequently called Dr. Peter), is never asked one to describe their disease, his intuitive perception being so strong he can tell any one their trouble without asking a question. His success is phenomenal, his practice enormous. He is sought after by hundreds wherever he goes, because he cures when every physician and remedy has failed. The giving of his great medicine, Golden Seal Bitters, which is made from herbs growing in the world famous Black Hills, is astonishing to the sick and disabled, chronic disorders yield to this master of disease, and his wonderful cures are regarded as phenomenal, but the press of fairly ever says, "What has been may be again." We say to the sick and disheartened give Golden Seal Bitters a fair trial, and they will speak for themselves. Sold by Perry Weed and Dr. G. W. Crouter.

Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles yield at once to the soothing and healing virtues of Dr. Bosanko's Pile Remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure. BUTTER AND EGGS WANTED

I WONDER.

BY CHARLES H. DASSETT.

I wonder at the ocean,
And stand upon the shore,
Sorely vast expanse of water,
And the grandeur I adore.

I wonder at such thoughtless youth
Who care for time no more;
But live gaily as the birds,
With no future to prepare.

I wonder at all things time;
For the years seem but a day,
As they hurry on our brows
And leave no traces behind.

I wonder at wind music,
Dulcet as heavenly art,
That sends away our sorrow,
And refines the human heart.

I wonder that the flowers
With such beauty, should decay,
To mark the fight of seasons
As they gently pass away.

I wonder at the evil
That's committed every day;
Thoughtless deeds are being done,
And the lives that go astray.

I wonder, too, at drinking men
Who forsake blithe their lives,
Neglect their homes and children,
And the pledges to their wives.

I wonder at the marvelous strength
Of the mighty ocean wave,
The battles and the triumphs,
As a nation, this last will.

I wonder, too, when man will change,
And adopt the better plan;
Not to live for himself alone,
But to live and toil for man!

A NIGHT OF FEAR.

BY CAPT. J. MONTFORD.

While listening to the murmuring leaves in mind,
More than a mile immersed within the wood.

A sudden terror seized his giddy head,
And his ears tingled, and he felt a chill,
Nature was in alarm; some danger nigh
Seemed threatening, some unknown to mortal eye.

—Dryden: "Theobaw and Honoria."

"I never hear that sound," remarked the Colonel, as the window sash and rattled against the side of the house, "but I am thrown back to a night, long ago, which I passed under very different circumstances."

We scented a story, and discovering by our attention that such was the case, the Colonel continued as follows:

"Half an hour before nightfall, upon a gloomy day early in March, I sprang into the saddle in front of the General's tent.

"I had orders in my pocket for the forces which lay several miles away toward the east; and I had been warned that a guerrilla band was skulking in the neighborhood; and knew that I must employ great caution to escape them.

"They would make short work with a straggler, and if I fell into their hands they would be but one way out, and that not such as I would choose.

"To escape my destination I must pass through a wood of considerable extent. I entered the thickwoods just as the last gleam of daylight vanished. The sky was overcast, and there was that strange silence in the air which precludes a storm.

"I rode at my designated speed, meeting with any adventure; and half an hour later set out upon my return.

"The impending storm was now at its height. Little or no rain fell; but the wind blew with redoubled strength as though determined to tear up the trees which disputed its way.

"I shivered as I rode along through the woods, and wished myself at the end of my journey. It was terribly dark, and I dared not urge my horse forward for fear of a fall.

"I soon suspected, from the motion of the horse, that we had strayed from the bridle-path, and this added to my anxiety.

"Occasionally the loud crash of falling timber would send the blood rushing through my veins, and the next instant my heart would almost cease to beat as a swelling, mysterious moan, which seemed to come as low as from the firmly-rooted trees, would reach my ear.

"To confess a truth, I was becoming frightened. My imagination was extremely active, and unhinged by the half-distinguished forms and sounds into something monstrously fearful.

"My mind seemed to partake of my trepidation, for a frequent short expression of his discontent.

"Suddenly a horrible yell fell upon my ear, followed by the report of a rifle.

"Instinctively I drew the horse back upon his haunches and listened. The storm fiends seemed laid for an instant, and all was quiet.

"'That was man's voice,' I said, something the sort of my startled steed, 'some one is in trouble.'

"At this moment, having recovered from my first fright, and the discomfiture which followed, I urged my horse onward.

"But no sprang back at the crash of firearms, supplemented by a series of the most fearful yells, sounded from in front.

"I recognized the sound well enough this time. It could have issued from no throats but the guerrillas', a class of men whom both Federals and Confederates had ample cause to fear.

"They could not be far away, and I instantly slipped from the saddle, and, securing the horse to a tree, began to creep toward the place where I knew some dark tragedy was transpiring.

"I soon came within sight of a number of torches, and knew that the actors were there.

"Stealing along through the trees, I came to the edge of a little glade and its occupants.

"There were just thirteen men—I was curious enough to count them—gathered around a young, boyish-looking man, who held a smoking revolver in his hand, with which he seemed to have fired.

"They were fierce-looking rascals, of the genuine guerrilla breed, attired in clothing of all cuts and colors—blue, gray, and civic.

"They are cowardly from principle; but I much wondered to see so many held at bay by one man, and I spied a tall man lying upon the ground.

"It went at once that he had been the leader of the gang, and had met his fate at the hands of the youth.

"The first report I had heard, and the yell which followed, had announced this death.

"It took but a very short time to make these observations, and the prospect was becoming darker for the young man every moment.

"He stood with his back against a tree, a brief, intrepid look upon his face; his eyes followed every movement of his foes, and his supple finger prepared to send a send into eternity at the first onset.

"The young man's daring quelled the rascals who confronted him; they were determined to avenge their leader, but no one seemed desirous of venturing his own life.

"But this inactivity could not last always, and the bold youth must succumb unless I could relieve him.

"I determined to make the attempt, although it seemed fruitless, and began immediately to form a plan.

"I was instructed by a sudden movement on the part of one of the outlaws.

"He had been maneuvering for some time to escape the youth's glance for an instant, and seemed satisfied at last that he had succeeded.

"I saw him draw a pistol from his belt, and instinctively a cry of warning rose to my lips.

"But it was unnecessary.

"There was a flash from the young man's pistol, and the ruffian fell, shot through the brain.

"Now was my opportunity, and, yelling at the top of my lungs, I broke from my place of concealment into the glade.

"'Come on, boys!' I cried, as though a legion of warriors were at my heels, and shooting down the first marauder who attracted my path, I reached the youth's side.

"My coast surprised the rascals, and dropping their bodies they scattered in every direction to escape the soldiers they expected were upon them.

"'This way,' I whispered, seizing the boy by the arm.

"He was quick witted enough to take advantage of the diversion I had made in his favor, and an instant later we were dashing through the wood toward the spot where I had left my horse.

"The guerrillas almost instantly recovered from their alarm, and, finding that we were lost too, they picked up their scattered torches and followed us, shouting furiously.

"They had lost two of their party besides their leader. If we now fell into their hands the most horrible death they could devise would be the result.

"Suddenly my foot caught in a root and I fell at full length upon the ground. Oh, the horror of that instant! I shall never forget it. But my companion turned and jerked me to my feet, and as we went, with the bloodthirsty yelling at our heels.

"It has seemed strange to me since that they did not fire upon us—we were but a very short distance in advance—but in the hurry of the cause they probably forgot that they were pistols.

"Instinct led me in the right direction, and as I was the best of my horse beneath the tree it infused new power into my knees.

"Reaching his side, I tore the bridle from its fastening and sprang into the saddle. My fellow-fugitive was behind me in an instant, and I spurred the steed forward with a reckless disregard of a downfall.

"Away we went, leaching against the branches, and cracking every twig in our attack of chronic diarrhea at the time, and, as a consequence, gained but a very indifferent night's rest. The night passed in quiet, and at daybreak the camp was astir, breakfast prepared and eaten, and other preparations were made for leaving ranions, of which we were sorely in need. It was about eight o'clock in the forenoon. A train of freight cars, loaded with provisions, stood upon a side track at a little distance, and thither I, with others of my company, repaired, along with some unlucky sergeant, and were soon returning laden with hard-tack, coffee, sugar, sausages and "mess-belly," in quantities sufficient, according to army regulations, for five days' rations to each man. Scarcely had we reached camp, however, when orders came to "fall in." But what, was the query, are we to do about our rations? Must we go into battle hungry, with plenty all around us? The suspense of a few moments' suspense in regard to the matter, when we were ordered to carry our provisions with us, for distribution at the first opportunity. From this we understood that we were not to move in any great distance. Indeed, our destination became known to almost everyone in a few minutes. The cause of this sudden removal was at an end. The enemy, who, it seems, had moved out very early, had been reported as approaching in force, and it became necessary to set with promptness and celerity, in order to meet the coming storm. So away we went, "toting" our provisions, in the form of a haversack, upon our shoulders, which at the point where we crossed was quite shallow, by the sandy bluff on the northern shore, and into a large rolling field, from which the last shock of wheat had been removed by its owners, I suppose, scarcely an hour.

Line of battle was speedily formed along the southern edge of this field, the line facing to the south. Our right rested on the river, and the line, taking a curved form round the crest of the ridge, was joined on the left by the North New York Heavy Artillery.

The company to which the writer belonged formed the extreme left of the line. The arrangement completed, the men were allowed to stack arms, and the distribution of rations began. As yet not a shot had been fired, and, in fact, scouts of no regiment were shall in our immediate front. Soon, all was changed, however, for it was now ten o'clock and the heat was intensely oppressive. Our commander, Allen, of the 1st Lieutenant, Colonel Allen, had come to congratulate me—if upon the favorable position I occupied the situation was concerned. Not that the position was so very good, but it was the most favorable. After standing in line of battle for half an hour, the 1st and 2d, from the crest of the ridge, and were ordered to "lie down." Then came the crash of musketry, and, observed the enemy, and will advance. Not a word was uttered, talking seemed that I shall remember to my dying hour, and, after finishing our cartridges in his arms for an instant, he reached his grasp and fell to the ground.

"I did not stop. I knew that he was dead, and I was soon beyond the reach of the bullets that whistled around me.

"As I entered the wood at the opposite side of the clearing I looked back and saw the guerrillas gaining like wolves around their victim.

"They did not pursue me further," said the Colonel, after a moment's pause, "and I reached the camp safely. But I never could discover the brave youth's name or the regiment to which he belonged.

THE BATTLE OF MONOCACY.

BY W. L. GARDNER.

The morning of July 9, A. D. 1864, broke clear, bright, and sultry over the hills and valleys of "Maryland, My Maryland." A slight shower had fallen during the night, only sufficient, however, to "lay" the dust, which at this time seemed to be plentiful everywhere, and freshen the heated summer air for a few hours, as by ten o'clock, a. m., the heat was as intense and the dust as easily disturbed as it had been on the preceding day.

A somber quiet brooded over the tranquil scene, soon to be broken by the roar of artillery, the crash of small arms, and all the "hideous clamors of war."

It is not my purpose to give a detailed account of this memorable engagement. Its details are familiar, even to the most casual student of our country's history. Sufficient to say here that on this occasion the Federal forces, numbering about 5,000 men of all arms, withstood for five mortal hours the steady advance and determined repulse of more than three times their number, consisting for the most part of the veterans of "Stonewall" Jackson's old corps, now under command of Jubal A. Early. They were provided with a numerous and well-served park of artillery, while the Federals had but two batteries of light field-pieces. These were handled, however, with great rapidity, and effectively, while the gunners have taken off the field in safety when the retreat was ordered. The Union forces were commanded by Major General Lew Wallace.

With these facts, and other prominent features of the affair, my sketch may very properly be said to have nothing to do. I shall confine myself to the little that came under my own observation that I wish to relate.

The brigade of which my regiment (One Hundred and Tenth Ohio) formed a part had arrived at Monocacy Junction, by rail, a little after nightfall on the evening of the eighth, disembarked at once, and waited to become, in full expectation of the battle which was destined to take place on the morrow. The writer was suffering from an attack of chronic diarrhea at the time, and, as a consequence, gained but a very indifferent night's rest. The night passed in quiet, and at daybreak the camp was astir, breakfast prepared and eaten, and other preparations were made for leaving ranions, of which we were sorely in need. It was now about eight o'clock in the forenoon. A train of freight cars, loaded with provisions, stood upon a side track at a little distance, and thither I, with others of my company, repaired, along with some unlucky sergeant, and were soon returning laden with hard-tack, coffee, sugar, sausages and "mess-belly," in quantities sufficient, according to army regulations, for five days' rations to each man. Shell Mounds in Florida.

These shell mounds are found in various parts of the State. The shells of which they contain have, through the action of time, become wholly deprived of their animal matter, and be a certain degree calcined, so that they form a kind of conglomerate, which is used extensively for building. It is called coquina. These shell heaps have attracted much notice on the part of geologists. It was at first supposed that they were made by lake deposits, but investigations show that they were of human construction. There are about twenty of these mounds in different parts of the State, varying in size from ordinary heaps fifteen to twenty feet in diameter and a few inches high to ridges several hundred feet in length, and varying in height from a few inches to fifteen feet and over, and all are more or less in the form of a long ridge. Among the more important groups of these mounds are those of Volusia, Philips Town, near the outlet of Lake Harney, which are 40 feet long, from 100 to 150 feet wide, and with an average height of 8 feet; the Black Hammock Mounds on the St. Johns, which form a line, though several miles broad, 1,200 feet in length, are 150 to 160 feet broad, and from 8 feet 6 inches to 10 feet 6 inches; Old Enterprise Mounds, on Lake Monroe, 600 feet long on the water line, in places 8 feet high; and Horse Landing Mounds, on the St. Johns River, 300 feet long by 180 feet in their widest part and about 7 feet high. In all of these mounds pieces of pottery are found imbedded in the shell deposits, also stone articles made of shell and bone, rude stone implements and many bones of animals, as deer, terrapin, rabbits, alligators, and others, and human bones. The Indians have conclusively that the mounds were made by man, and it is supposed that they were the sites of villages or cemeteries, of whose no traces now remain, save these deposits of kitchen debris. These deposits contain the shells of a few species only, and the inland mounds contain only those of fresh-water mollusks. Along the coast there are some shell deposits, though smaller, of oyster shells. The age of these mounds is a much-vexed question. They were found overgrown with heritage and forest, just as they now are, when the first white man set foot on Florida soil. The Indians then inhabiting the country knew nothing of their origin, but had traditions that they were built by tribes that inhabited the land long before the Indians came. The fact that the shells have lost all traces of organic matter shows them to be of great age, and so does the fact that the deposit of earth above them is sufficient to give place to the roots of the largest trees. An examination of an old oak which was blown down on one of the mounds showed that it was at least 500 years old, and as a century or two was needed to produce sufficient deposit of earth upon the shell heap to permit the growth of the tree, it is probable that the existence of the inhabitants of these mounds antedate not have been later than the beginning of the Christian era.—Inter Ocean.

What a Change!

A few short weeks ago that young girl was the personification of health, vigor, and beauty. The bloom upon her cheeks rivaled that of the rose; her step was light and springy, her every movement was a revelation of perfect physical health. Yet now she is pallid and haggard, and her superintendent visibly has given place to a strange dullness and languor. What has caused this change? Functional irregularities which can be cured by Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription," a remedy for which thousands of women to-day owe their lives. All druggists.

It is a pity that such facts as the one following cannot be written, so as to be preserved, upon some sort of indestructible paper. "My wife suffered seven years and was bedridden, too." said W. E. Durette, of Emporia, Kansas, "in spite of physicians taking her off her. So, I tried a Golden Medical Discovery and Pellets. All drugging by the physicians ceased, and she was well in a few months." Welsh Names.

Welsh names are proverbially of a crack-jaw tendency, but perhaps the palm may be given to the following, which casually occurred in a conversation between a Welsh maiden and an English lady at a village on the foot of Snowdon. The visitor inquired: "What is the name of your little village, my dear?" Welsh girl: "Llefelfrawcy, sir." E. V.: "Oh, and are your parents living?" W. G.: "Yes, sir; but my father works at Clwaed Cadrarlgwain." E. V.: "Very well. Any brothers?" W. G.: "Yes, three, sir. One at Hlasbaucrhengo, one at Llanfairpwllmallwyvyc, one Llanfair." E. V.: "Only two, sir; one is with my aunt at Llanfairmyrddinfrydwyll." E. V.: "My word, what a name! And the other?" W. G.: "Yes, she is in service, sir, at Llanfairrydlgwyngyll gogerychwyrndrobwllgerirtrobwllylandysiliogogogoch."

Josiah Allen's Wife on the License Question.

"How can we help 'workin', sister Minkley? How can we hold our hands up and rest on our feather beds? If a deadly serpent had broken loose from some circus, and was a wrathin' and twistin' his way through Jonesville, swallerin' down a man or woman every few days, would men stand with their hands in their pockets, or a leanin' up against their doors a-whittlin', arguin' feebly from year to year, whether it was best to try to catch the serpent and cut its head off, or whether it was best, after all, to let him go free? After they had seen some of their best friends swallowed down by it, wouldn't they make an effort to capture it? Wouldn't they chase it into any hole they could get it into? Wouldn't they turn the first key on it they could get hold of? And if it broke loose from that, wouldn't they try another key, and another, till they got one that would hold him?

"Do you suppose they would rest out time arguin' as much as a year to crunch and swallor folks accordin' to law? And would it be any easier for for the folks that was crunched and swallered, and for the survivin' friends of the same, if they was killed by act of congress? Which would such a law be thought of, Sister Minkley? And that is nothin' to the law as they be. For what is one multitude sized serpent in a circus, that couldn't eat more'n one man a week with any relish, to this innerperance, that swallers down a hundred thousand every year, and is as big as the Great Midgard serpent? Twice heard Thyrm, I read about, whose folds encompassed the earth?

"Sister Minkley sithed so loud thus it sounded some like a groan, and I kept on in a dreadful eloquent way:

"We know get to take those things to harbor, Sister Minkley, in order to realize 'em. Yours and mine are as far apart as the poles when we are talkin' about such things. As a general rule we can bear other folkses trials and sufferin's with resignation. When it is your brother and husband that is goin' the downward road, we can endure it with considerable calmness; but when it is a part of my own heart, my Willie or my Charley that is goin' down to ruin, we feel as if men and angels must help rescue him. It was this that sent forth the wonderful Woman's Crusade, that made tender, timid women into lions willin' to oppose their weakness to handed strength. It was this that made victory possible to them. What was the crusade to the Holy Land that I have heard Thomas A. read about to this? That warm protect the sepulchre where the body of our Lord once laid, but the, was to defend the living Christ, the God in man."—Copyright.—By permission of "Samantha," Josiah Allen's Wife.

Work to be Done.

To those who are disquieted in their religious beliefs, who are conscious of religious aspirations, and who sincerely desire to assent to the creeds of the churches, there is one sure course to pursue: Let them enter upon some good humanitarian work. We may be mistaken as to our religious creeds, but we can not go wrong in trying to benefit our fellow-men. Hence we should all be interested in some work of benevolence. To such the temperance movement ought to be particularly attractive. It is the great practical reform of the age and the country we live in. Every one knows of the horrors of the liquor traffic, and there is abundance of testimony to prove that those communities which have put a stop to liquor selling are vastly better off than where the traffic is unrestricted, and liquor drinking is under legal sanction. All forms of vice or crime flourish in every community where liquor dealing is permitted. The evidences multiply that the temperance tide is rising and, in every part of the country. Indeed, the encouraging reports come from so many different directions that we have not space to tell the whole story. Local option is now the battle-cry in about every state in the Union, as well as in the dominion of Canada. These skirmishes in the localities are first in order. Then will come state action, and finally the nation must take the matter in hand and reduce to a minimum the evils in the traffic in strong drink.—Demorest's Monthly.

Temperance Items.

The old Moravian town of Salem, N. C. has not permitted any liquor to enter the place for one hundred years. It is the banner temperance town of the country.

At Griffin, Ga., recently a man who had been mayor of the city and one of its most prosperous and popular citizens, died a pauper in the poor-house. Drink did it.

An Irish candidate for parliament in a speech at Dublin said that $750,000,000 had been spent in Ireland for drink in the last three years, in this treats whose laborers were starving, and where, it was said, the tenants could not pay their rents.

The old saying that the devil gave a hermit the choice of three great vices, one of which was drunkenness. The hermit chose this as being the least sinful. He became drunk and then committed the other two. And it still remains a fact that a man is capable of any crime, however revolting, when under the influence of liquor. Whisky is the devil's Samson and Delilah.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Able legal opinion in Rhode Island seems to the view that liquor licenses it would seem that they ought to be given up in a dreadful eloquent way:

"Sister Minkley sithed so loud thus it sounded some like a groan, and I kept on in a dreadful eloquent way:

FIRE PROTECTION.

Since the JOURNAL was issued last week, the question has been mooted whether, in voting the bonds asked for, the council were compelled to accept the proposition now in their hands. We understand that they are not. This proposition gives them something definite to work upon, but the committee had in mind, when the resolution was drawn, the desirability of being at liberty to accept any other or better proposition, if any were made before the time for placing the bonds. We have reason to believe that other propositions will be made; and the committee may have a chance to do very much better than we mentioned last week.

Memorial Day.

On Monday Charlevoix entertained the largest crowd of visitors ever within her limits, except possibly on the day of the regatta last year.

Memorial day is of greater day here than the Fourth of July, because Baxter post G. A. R. contains some most enterprising men who are anxious to make for their society a place at his annual of the village. And to do this there is no better way than to make each recurring anniversary one ever to be remembered.

Stevens post of East Jordan, Ironton post of Ironton, and Walter Cliff post of Boyne City, were here in a body, and members of posts at Eastport and Elk Rapids were present and took a place in the procession.

The day was all that could be desired, and people from around the county came in all manner of conveyances, and took part in the exercises and procession.

The Elk Rapids band also came and helped to enliven the line of march.

The Charlevoix band led the procession, followed by 200 school children, the various G. A. R. posts, Elk Rapids band, and citizens in carriages and on foot.

At the cemetery the program was followed substantially as heretofore published in this paper.

The floral tributes were profuse and very handsome.

The address of Prof. Faxe was well received, and the musical selections received numerous words of praise.

Butter post furnished dinners at the various hotels for visiting members, who are thus again assured of a hearty welcome whenever they visit our ambitious city.

As Others See Us.

From an article in the last Petoskey Record, headed "The Idle Day in Charlevoix," we take the following concerning our boat builder, Jos. Beauvais:

On our return to the boat livery of Mr. Jos. Beauvais we took a few minutes to look through his establishment of the most accomplished boat builder in these parts. Many years Mr. Beauvais, who constructs pleasure boats not only for the resorters and people of Charlevoix, but for Chicago, Milwaukee and other points, is certainly a master of his business. In his shop are now boats ranging in price from $40 to $175—the price being according to finish, ornamentation and fancy work put on them. All of his boats are remarkable for their lightness, one man being able to lift and carry a four seat finally built with oars, but are nevertheless built with as much strength and are perfectly staunch, safe boats. One boat just finished for a Chicago gentleman at $75 contains 17 different kinds of wood, the little deck in bow and stern affording beautiful specimens of inlaid and joiners work. Not only does the excellence of his work commend Mr. Beauvais to his patrons, but his politeness and readiness to accommodate makes him a favorite with all who come in contact with him."

A Remarkable Clock.

One of the most remarkable of clocks has just been constructed in London for a banking establishment. It is on the twenty-foot hour principle, and is notable as possessing probably the simplest method which has yet been devised for indicating the time according to the new twenty-four hour clock in question has only one hand, the long minute hand, and the figures around the dial are arranged in three concentrical from five to sixty. The hours are shown on a sunk dial revolving under the upper dial, a space being left in the upper dial in which the next hour figure comes forward instantaneously upon the minute hand completing its circuit of sixty minutes; this is, in a word, the solitary hand marks the minutes, and the sunk space shows the hour.

Know of About It.

"I've lost five cases all my life," said the forgetful passenger from Burlington, "and I know all about you. There won't nobody tell me nothin' about a case. I know 'em round the tipper their noses to the last hairs in their tails. Way, down in our section when they want an expert on a case they send a boy right up to my house. Guess I've been called in fifty times as an expert witness in lawsuits 'bout boss trades. But I'll tell you what makes me mad, and that is to meet one o these boss-learned fellers who think they can tell all about a hoss from what they read. Only last week I met one of that kind, and the way I moved him up fallin' about the anatomy and diseases of the hoss made him wish he had never set his eyes on me.

"By the way," said an old man in the next seat, who had a pair of regulation eyes behind a pair of huge spectacles, and a little interested in the horse business, purely from a scientific standpoint, "I never handled hosses—I'm a professor of anatomy in a college—shown you, lemme see, a very point I've always wanted settled. You are just the man I've been looking for, and if you would be so kind—"

"Certainly, sir certainly. I kin tell you anything about a hoss. I'm jest glad to put the point you're mixed up on, sir.

"Thanks. Please tell me how a horse walks. What is the motion of his fore legs in relation to the motion of his hind legs. That is what has puzzled me."

"That's easy enough," replied the expert in a tone of confidence. "The hoss picks up his right fore leg and his left hind leg simultaneously, and after they have been set down he picks up the left fore leg and the right hind leg at the same instant."

"Let you $10 he doesn't."

"Wh-what's that?" queried the expert, as if the breath had been knocked out of him by this sudden proposition. "What's that? Do you mean to say I don't know what I'm talking 'bout? Do you question my knowledge?"

"Money talks."

The expert was in for it and had to face the music. The money was put up in the hands of the conductor, and as the next station all hands adjourned to the platform where a pair of hoss boards were started on a walk beat like the novel wager.

"Well, I swow," exclaimed the disconcerted expert, as he saw the conductor hand the stakes to the old man with the long-tailed coat, "what a thought that a walkin' hoss picks up one foot at a time! Never did like those inferior hoss-learnin' chaps, anyhow; durn the durn luck!"—Chicago Herald Train Talk.

THE PRESIDENT'S MARRIAGE.

Yesterday's papers were full of the details of the preparations for the marriage of President Cleveland and Miss Frank Folsom, which was to take place at the white house at 7 o'clock last evening. We shall doubtless have the full particulars on the inside of next week's paper.

Who Introduced Cheap Labor?

One of the London journals has the grace to say that Europe, having adopted a system of exporting paupers to the United States is primarily responsible for the trouble manufacturers are now giving this country. It adds that America is now reaping the results of her folly in trying to make American citizens of the scum Europe.

For twenty-five years the alleged sons of politicians who have foisted on America the misnamed protective system have claimed to justify their act in the necessity they conceived or pretended to exist of saving American workingmen from competition with the pauper labor of Europe, during all the while many of the manufacturers in whose interest the legislation were really acting were selfishly and systematically bringing the pauper labor of Europe to the very doorway of the American laborer. What settlements now surround the great iron mills of the country? The settlements made at the instigation of mill owners by cheap labor drawn from the plains of Poland and of Bohemia. The American laborer whom the protected industries were to protect no longer exists in the factories, forges and furnaces of this country. Furniture manufacturers of America have maintained in Bohemia shipping agents of human freight, and have settled the bills, to be recouped from the earnings of mechanics thus brought over. The mines and the coke fields of Pennsylvania swarm now with semi-savage Hungarians brought thither, the coal and iron barons declare, in order to dignify, ennoble and enrich American labor! And all the while American labor has been driven into other channels.

These manufacturers, deliberately false to the specious plea by which they secure the enactment of prohibitory tariffs and selfishly eager to cut down and cheapen the labor market which they professed to maintain, are responsible in large measure for the destruction of the American workman as he was known before the days of a war tariff and the substitution of the latest and least desirable population from Europe. They sawed the wind. We cannot blame Europe for the alacrity with which it welcomed the agent of the American manufacturer, ridding it of the poorest of its population, but the American laborer and the American citizen not a beneficiary of the hypocritical tariff lies laves a strong indictment to protest against the mill men and manufacturers of America who, in pursuance of blindly selfish policy, have brought the present trouble upon the land.—Chicago Herald.

Just as soon as the man emptied the burning tobacco and hot ashes from his pipe in the horse's ear, the horse went tearing up the street as if he never intended to stop again.

When General Tourtche was summoned from Warsaw to St. Petersburg he did not desire to leave any unnecessary trouble for his successor. Consequently he ordered a number of nihilists to be hanged some time before the date fixed in their sentences. "I want to go off such jobs cleared up before I leave," said the conscientious general.

There is no such word as diamond known in the trade for the artisans in nature. The word used for diamonds in the rough is bort. It is a Dutch word, meaning a little good-for-nothing stone. It is harder on the outside than within, and seems to have a core like a hard nut, a piece of very fine wood, which is softer than the one evolved of the wood. Sometimes it's impossible to get a diamond of great promise because there is a bort piece with it. The art of cutting the diamond is one of long practice, and requires the aspect of economy and taste as well as mechanism.

The immense quantity of peanuts grown in Africa, South America, and in our own southern States affords not only a pleasant article of food, but a very large source of oil production. The seed contains from 45 to 50 per cent of a nearly colorless, bland, mild oil, not unlike olive oil, and used for similar purposes. It is a non-drying oil, which changes little by exposure to the air, and remains fluid even at several degrees colder than Dorkosing degrees, Fah. A very great quantity of soap is manufactured from this kind of oil, and, some of the finest toilet soaps imported from France are of this material.

If social Adam Bedeem, speaking of English servants, says: Another pompous, is the cast-off clothes. The valets and the footmen, which are entitled to these, and are outraged if you make any contrary disposition of them. I once gave a child about my house some old handkerchiefs, as which my valet protested; and I heard no little outcry. "You get the strings." They often look smarter than those they serve, wearing their waistcoats sometimes on their figures. I have heard of ladies who send their suits to their maids, though never of a gentleman who bargained in old clothes with his man. When lately women really always to anything unworthy, he was deserted to a point that leaves our sex far behind.

Says the Washington correspondent of the Philadelphia Press: "Rob Ingersoll called upon Secretary Lamar at the interior department, and in the course of half an hour's conversation said scores of witty things, which Lamar, long before he took up the sofa in his office, enjoyed immensely. Ingersoll finally made some remark in ridicule of orthodox Christianity. There was a momentary pause when he finished, and the Secretary jumped to his feet, throwing his long hair, with an impatient gesture, back from his forehead. "Ingersoll," he exclaimed, "I hope to live to see the day when you will come to this regular city and preach to the world Christ and His crucified! With your magnificent talents and colossal oratory you would work a revival such as the world has never seen. I hope, Rob, to see the day when you will come to pray, and you could not engage in any prayer so sure to do good."

One of the most novel apologets for celibacy, and a Welsh curate to the Rhondda Troubles, a Mrs. Thompson, she is the parson's wife of Lewesville, Ky., and was by her own congregation pointed. Mrs. Thompson is quite a character in her way. She is the daughter of Alexander Campbell, who was early founder of some of Campbellites of which Christ's church is a branch. She was appointed in December Ross, Vice President of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union for Kentucky. Her chief duty is to hold out. Around the throat of her husband is a massive collar of gold, to a member of whom, and addressed to "Professor Tilden," a letter of congratulation, the Lewesville congregation, in their wisdom, had, Mrs. Thompson said, "Presented me." Mrs. Thompson, with a massive gold watch and chain, and the word "Hid in" at the head of the chain, and the word "Hid" at the other end. "Hid in Christ," she explained, "Hid in Christ." When the petition reached the wife it was, Mrs. Thompson was driven to it. He (meaning her husband) told me what Mrs. Thompson had done, and, after scouring that "It was just like a woman," he declared that personally opposed her and the distribution of the gold watch and chain. "Hid in Christ," the old complexed Washington society to C. A. Van Vliet," says the Washington correspondent of the Cleveland Leader. "You will find him at every grand reception, at nearly every hop dance, and you may have heard the story of how Gen. Sherman, who is nearly as great a dinner-goer as Gen. Van Vliet, on forgetting the place at which he was invited to dinner one night, saw Van Vliet passing his house in full dress, and followed him, being sure that he would lead him to the right place, and was not disappointed. Well, during Arthur's administration the general was a leading light in his set is now. He was a strong republican, and every one is non surprised to see him so close in with the democrats. Still every one likes Van Vliet, and an invitation to dinner should have no public. But to my story. The day after Cleveland was inaugurated Gen. Van Vliet appeared at the white house, and began to introduce, in the presence of others, Col. Lamont as to force for and the president should carry on the administration, exactly in the spirit was. Lamont finally gone on at some length, one of the bystanders, who was a gentleman of some pecuniary means, said: "And pray, how long have you been a democrat, Gen. Van Vliet?" "Since yesterday noon, sir," was the reply."

President Cleveland is the first president of the United States who ever made the rights and welfare of working women and women the special subject of a message to congress, and yet the republican press is howling to know what a democratic administration has done for labor. The first by Cleveland and the democrats, since March 4th, 1885, have done more for the people than the republicans did during their entire lease of power of 25 years.—Cheboygan Democrat.

Cure for Corns.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, and lower parts of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has taken cold or has strained himself by over exertion. At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, as a coated tongue, want of relish for food, loss of flesh, low spirits, costiveness, and in females, irregularity of the menses. Sometimes the patient has all these symptoms, and yet the disease may be of a mild character, and the timely use of Dr. Bigelow's Pile Ointment will soon be the application of a remedy which will relieve the severest cases. Dr. Bigelow's Pile Ointment is a soothing ointment, which will relieve the most sensitive parts. Sold by Geo. W. Gilmore, Druggist, Charlevoix.

The East Jordan Enterprise has the following concerning the Bridge Street house, recently re-opened by R. A. Campbell: "During our stay in Charlevoix last Saturday, we took dinner at the Bridge Street house, which has lately been opened by Mr. R. A. Campbell, a former resident of Traverse City. The house has been thoroughly renovated, making its interior a model of neatness. The tables are spread with the best the market affords, and at no place in town can the inner man be better gratified than at the Bridge Street house tables. We bespeak for Mr. Campbell a large and lucrative business, and can heartily recommend this house to our people."

The Toledo Telegram has the following concerning the company: "Uncle Tom's Cabin as presented by Maxwell's initial company, lies in it so much that is new, novel and changing that the people do not tire of it. The scenic effects are fine, the jubilee singers are good, the two Marks bring out all there is belonging to that peculiar character, and Uncle Tom is the personification of religious devotion, self-sacrifice and tender love; the performing dog is a wonder, and in fact, the entire performance is a series of surprises which cannot fail to please."

At the February term of circuit court, Moore, and Graham, the two young men who were to have been tried for complicity in the murder of an Indian last summer, were released on bail to appear here at the next term of court. Accordingly last Tuesday, they put in an appearance, accompanied by their attorney, and proceeded to the court house for trial. After waiting all day for the judge and prosecuting attorney to put in an appearance, their attorney adjourned court, thus freeing them and releasing their bondsmen. It is authoritatively stated here that the bright (?) genius who officiates in the capacity of county prosecutor, really objected in the simplicity of his soul, that the prisoners would show up at Boyne City. In this he was slightly mistaken. They were cited to appear here, and they did so.—Enterprise.

BUTTER AND EGGS WANTED.

CONFIDENCE.

BY W. A. DUNN.

Flowers may bloom and look sweet,
Birds may chirp and sing,
Hearts may melt at a lover's feet;
Not unless, if you are constituted thus.

Birds may sing and seem glad,
Happiness may shed its light,
Lovers may be made giddy and sad;
Not unless, as long as you are true.

The sun may shine warm and clear,
Dwellers may lose its charms,
Love may be whispered for a selfish ear;
Not mine, for constancy runs in my heart.

Stars may twinkle in gloss,
The best of friends may part,
Sympathy may take wings and flee;
Not mine, I'm a sly-hearted.

Let the years come and go,
Let tears and smiles have their fill,
Let the rivers cease to flow
But, love, you must be with me still.

Hearts have often been broken,
Lovers have parted most;
Yet life, for constancy is the only word spoken,
Fidelity the only thought I've had.

THE DOUBLE ESCAPE.

BY CAPTAIN JAMES MONTSFORD.

One evening the services of spies was the subject of conversation; and, between a pause in the argument, the Colonel remarked:

"I think the majority of the so-called spies who suffered were perfectly innocent of any such intention. I had a narrow escape myself.

"We are listening for the story, uncle," cried his niece, "you must be very cautious in your speech—or you will be forced into the relation of a story."

The Colonel smiled.

"An old man is seldom unwilling to relate his adventures," he said, "and I am not of the number of those who are."

Everyone was becomingly attentive, and, after a short silence, the Colonel continued as follows:

"Major B——— and I had been schoolfellows; later in life we were friends. At the commencement of hostilities we joined opposite factions. He was a Tennessean; I had imbibed the politics of old Massachusetts, and our difference of opinion was very natural.

"Nevertheless, our friendship did not change, and when my duty brought me within twenty miles of his plantation, he invited me to pay him a visit.

"The change from the hard fare of the camp to the company and table of my friend was a pleasant one, and not likely to refuse.

"The Union troops were at that time victorious, and although the command to which Major B——— was attached had their quarters quite near, I anticipated no danger.

"Attiring myself in plain clothes, I started upon my visit, reaching the Major's residence at noon.

"I was made very welcome, and passed a pleasant day. But I could not fail to see that my friend was preoccupied and with reason, which was unusual with him, his merry disposition being well known.

"After nightfall, when we were seated in the Major's private room, engaged with cigars and talk, I hinted that he seemed unfathomably grave.

"'I am serious, Frank,' he said, with a grave smile, 'and I believe I should tell you why.'

"I thought he should, and as I requested his confidence, he said that all his fear was for me.

"'Indeed!' cried I, 'I am very comfortable just at present. How joyful all my comrades would be were they in the same situation.'

"'I doubt it,' was the Major's reply. 'We have advanced our lines, and you are now within three miles. I received the news soon after you came. Your danger is heightened by the fact that spies have been doing considerable damage lately.'

"'And I'm liable to be shot if caught, eh?'

"'I am afraid so.'

"The subject was dropped for the time. It was merely a suspicion, and might not be fulfilled. We became very lively as the evening wore, but our conviviality was suddenly dashed by the entrance of a negroman.

"The black's eyes were almost starting from his head, and he informed us, in an excited whisper, that a posse of soldiers were approaching the house.

"The news was confirmed by the sound of tins and horses in the yard without.

"'Come into my bed-chamber,' cried the Major, leaping to his feet. 'If there is any danger it will allow us time to prepare for it.'

"He hurried me into another apartment, and, locking me inside, went to review his visitors.

"In five minutes he returned, his face expressive of the utmost concern.

"'It's Captain Trock,' he said, 'with a company of soldiers. He's my enemy, and would like nothing better than to bring me into trouble. He told my wife he was in search of a spy, who had been seen in the neighborhood. He certainly suspects you to be in the house.'

"This speech disturbed me not a little. To be executed as a spy was, even in idea, simply horrible. 'I'll have to run for it,' I said.

"'Yes, but you are liable to be captured, and then nothing is gained. Here's my uniform, and be there the articles upon the floor. Dress yourself immediately and slip out of the window.'

"I have thought since that this was not very sound advice. Should I be discovered in the enemy's lines, and attired in their colors, I would be almost beyond pardon.

"As it was, I was allowed no time to think, and quickly began to metamorphose myself. I was hastened by the sound of loud voices, raised to a suspicious tone, without; and, a moment later, I slipped through the window.

"If he thought about it at all, the Major doubtless supposed that I would remain skulking near the house until the men had left the premises; but I was drawn away by seeing a soldier approaching just as I reached the ground.

"He did not observe me, and stealing around to the front of the house, I reached the road, and started away upon the run toward the Union lines.

"I hurried along for something like a mile, and began to regain my confidence. There was no moon, but the numerous stars gave sufficient light to warn me of the presence of foes should they appear, and also, unfortunately, to discover me to them.

"Major B——— had said the Confederates had advanced their lines, and I expected every moment to be challenged.

"Still I must proceed. The danger behind was just as great, and far more certain.

"Suddenly I heard the sound of horses in the wood on the right hand. I guessed that the foes were there, and leaving the open road in haste, passed among the trees upon the left.

"I stole along for some distance, and began to think I was to make a clean escape. But fate was against me, and when I saw two soldiers standing beneath a tree directly upon a line with myself, and not over a dozen feet away, I gave myself up for one of the foes.

"But they did not seem to have observed me, and, halting immediately, I hoped darkness would screen me from their eyes.

"Five minutes I stood there, motionless. The fellows were talking together in semi-drunken tones, and I saw a bottle pass between them.

"This seemed favorable to me, so far; but my hopes were soon blown aside.

"One of the men saw me, and promptly directed the other's attention in the same direction.

"Whether it was the liquor they had taken, I have no means of knowing; but they made no attempt to approach, but stood consulting in low tones.

"I could not understand, but even this was better than a down-right discovery, and I stood still, studying the scene of leaning to catch their words.

"I heard the word 'Major' pass between them several times, and thinking they took me for the gentleman whom, when I wore, I was about to walk in without ceremony, I was seized with the morals alomed in oath, and, ranging his silk-cap, charged at my head.

"I felt a stinging sensation immediately above my left ear, and my brain whirled. I must have thought myself dead, for I fell forward at full length, my face downward.

"I recovered my senses almost instantly, and as the fiends were running toward me, I lay perfectly quiet.

"'I've killed him, Hank,' said one, in a shrill whisper.

"'He stood over me, but did not attempt to touch my person.

"'Think him,' growled the other. 'I don't kier if I hev, I wouldn't hev his brains on my rather dry.

"'Perkillin' the old woman's cow.'

"'Yes (another blank)' and if shooting a cow is to get a man through I don't want to stay here no more.'

"'What are you goin' to do? You didn't speak to him fore you fired, and everybody knows you hankered after him. You'll be shot yourself.'

"'So will you.'

"'I didn't do the shootin.'

"'No; but you stood by, and didn't stop me.'

"The rascals argued in this strain for some time, and it was at last decided that they should spoil the body, and desert to the enemy's lines.

"Major's private room, engaged with cigars and talk. I hinted that he seemed unfathomably grave.

"'I am serious, Frank,' he said, with a grave smile, 'and I believe I should tell you why.'

"I thought he should, and as I requested his confidence, he said that all his fear was for me.

"'Indeed!' cried I, 'I am very comfortable just at present. How joyful all my comrades would be were they in the same situation.'

"'I doubt it,' was the Major's reply. 'We have advanced our lines, and you are now within three miles. I received the news soon after you came. Your danger is heightened by the fact that spies have been doing considerable damage lately.'

"'And I'm liable to be shot if caught, eh?'

"'I am afraid so.'

"The subject was dropped for the time. It was merely a suspicion, and might not be fulfilled. We became very lively as the evening wore, but our conviviality was suddenly dashed by the entrance of a negroman.

"The black's eyes were almost starting from his head, and he informed us, in an excited whisper, that a posse of soldiers were approaching the house.

"The news was confirmed by the sound of tins and horses in the yard without.

"'Come into my bed-chamber,' cried the Major, leaping to his feet. 'If there is any danger it will allow us time to prepare for it.'

"He hurried me into another apartment, and, locking me inside, went to review his visitors.

"In five minutes he returned, his face expressive of the utmost concern.

"'It's Captain Trock,' he said, 'with a company of soldiers. He's my enemy, and would like nothing better than to bring me into trouble. He told my wife he was in search of a spy, who had been seen in the neighborhood. He certainly suspects you to be in the house.'

"This speech disturbed me not a little. To be executed as a spy was, even in idea, simply horrible. 'I'll have to run for it,' I said.

"'Yes, but you are liable to be captured, and then nothing is gained. Here's my uniform, and be there the articles upon the floor. Dress yourself immediately and slip out of the window.'

"I have thought since that this was not very sound advice. Should I be discovered in the enemy's lines, and attired in their colors, I would be almost beyond pardon.

"As it was, I was allowed no time to think, and quickly began to metamorphose myself. I was hastened by the sound of loud voices, raised to a suspicious tone, without; and, a moment later, I slipped through the window.

"If he thought about it at all, the Major doubtless supposed that I would remain skulking near the house until the men had left the premises; but I was drawn away by seeing a soldier approaching just as I reached the ground.

"The rascals argued in this strain for some time, and it was at last decided that they should spoil the body, and desert to the enemy's lines.

"Major B——— and I had been schoolfellows; later in life we were friends. At the commencement of hostilities we joined opposite factions. He was a Tennessean; I had imbibed the politics of old Massachusetts, and our difference of opinion was very natural.

"Nevertheless, our friendship did not change, and when my duty brought me within twenty miles of his plantation, he invited me to pay him a visit.

"The change from the hard fare of the camp to the company and table of my friend was a pleasant, I was not likely to refuse.

"The Union troops were at that time victorious, and although the command to which Major B——— was attached had their quarters quite near, I anticipated no danger.

"Attiring myself in plain clothes, I started upon my visit, reaching the Major's residence at noon.

"I was made very welcome, and passed a pleasant day. But I could not fail to see that my friend was preoccupied and with reason, which was unusual with him, his merry disposition being well known.

"After nightfall, when we were seated in the Major's private room, engaged with cigars and talk, I hinted that he seemed unfathomably grave.

"'I am serious, Frank,' he said, with a grave smile, 'and I believe I should tell you why.'

"The Major's innocence apparent," said the Colonel, after a pause, "but he had cause, and upon receiving a slight wound, a few months after my escape, left the army.

"Had before doing so, he had published Captain Trock for his perjury, by running him through in a duel."

Executions in France.

They have no blundering executions in France. The executioner is neither a hero nor an outcast, as in other lands. The office of executioner has been simplified as much as possible. The instrument is erected the night before, and the people come to see that it works well. Formerly the condemned was often tortured and cut and hacked, and he was always encouraged by having a good look at the gleaming knife as it approached so slowly but surely. Now the knife is hidden from the man, who is carried in after three seconds, a noiseless touch of the button, and all is over.

A Story of Daniel Drew.

Mr. Drew was squeezed one famous day by operators in Northwest stock, and he is down a big pile of money in losses. Not unnaturally, Mr. Drew felt grieved, while other people were correspondingly light-spirited and happy. It was a great thing to catch Drew dancing napping, and a hundred men went the rounds in celebration of his upsetting. Some of these bits of humor fell upon Uncle Daniel's own ears, but he did not seem to pay much heed to comments that made all the rest of Wall street laugh hilariously. Some young men did enough to know better even went so far as to accost him personally and laugh in his face. Behind the smile that lighted his face it is hardly possible that the recording angel heard a grinding of teeth, but to my own, desperate.

"We soon reached the commandant's tent, and, although it was late, an immediate examination was resolved upon.

"The commandant was a tigrish-looking man of fifty, and he received me in a tone which decided my fate. It would be useless to repeat everything that was said and done, but the substance was, that I had been found within the lines of the Major's residence; that his friend had fled before me, and I was found in my with a disguise as a means of escape.

"Captain Trock expressed his belief that I had been skulking in the neighborhood for several days, and one of the men who had lived upon the place, and left at the war, declared that his companion had taken pieces from the silver and left the army, who searched my pockets, tore away with them.

"When the fellows whom Trock had employed in some distance from the house ended why he was deserting, he returned that he had his companion, who the shed, leg, had mistaken me for the Major, and had shot at me, and they had fled.

"This was sufficient evidence for a military court, and notwithstanding strongest denial, I was sentenced to be shot at daybreak. The Major was to have another examination.

"I observed a triumphant sneer upon Captain Trock's face as we were led from the tent. He was probably amply satisfied with his revenge.

"We were conducted to a tent bordering upon the residence, and placing two guards, Captain Trock retired.

"I thought I was expected to die at once, my fatigue was so overpowering that, but the Major had been with me, I should have fallen asleep upon the spot.

"Poor my friend suffered the greatest anguish for the position in which I had placed him, and he declared unbearable. He was of an ardent, impulsive disposition, and, when he declared unbearable. He was of an ardent, impulsive disposition, and, when he were the resolutions he formed to avenge my wrongs upon the Captain.

"The night passed, as nights always will, no matter how uncomfortable our situation may be, and when the morning came I was awakened by a soldier who had come to inform me that he had his companion, who the shed, leg, had mistaken me for the Major, and had shot at me, and they had fled.

Everybody's Water.

The liquor traffic might do for other business well not do for ours; it might do for earlier centuries—it will not do for the last quarter of the nineteenth. There is war about it in America, the pledge of total abstinence is the minister roll; the gospel hymns are its rallying songs, the badge of blue as uniform. We aim our weapons straight at the brain, straight at the heart. Our bullets are ballots, our sabre strokes are lance-thrusts of pathos, our bomb shells are statistics and arguments. We eliminate marching orders in two verses of this song in which law and gospel are bound up together. One declares, "Go unto him that justifieth the wicked for a reward;" the other says: "It is good neither to eat meat nor to drink wine nor anything whereby thy brother stumbleth."

In this vast and daily enlarging army, the mild, soft-eared ones, who are afraid of guns and gunpowder, may march side by side with the gallant and the strong. I seem to hear their gentle footsteps as they gather to fight against rum in the name of patriotism, philanthropy, and God. It is a woman, after all, who has given the costliest hostages to fortune. Out into the battle of life they have sent their best beloved with fearful odds against them; with names that have been legalized and set along our streets. Beyond the arms their hold them long, their hays have gone forever. There is not one man to whom some woman's life is not a dear and sacred thing; and I happed to pen, by the pain and dangers their have dared, who are the best beloved of your homes; to represent by your ballots, their prayers, their tears, their hopes.

But beside being a war of the mothers and daughters, the sisters and wives, this is a war between religion and the rum shop. It is an irrepressible conflict, for the angel must triumph or else the dragon will. And so, wherever is not enlisted in this war, the seventy thousand churches of our land with their eight million members, corporations founded on the avowed principle of self-sacrifice for others' good, ought to come forward and place their names on the total abstinence muster roll.—Miss Francis E. Willard.

A Bird's Savings Bank.

In California the woodpecker stores acorns away, although he never eats them. He bores seven thousand holes slightly in size, at the fall of the year, invariably in a pine tree. The holes are neat, which he adjusts to one of the holes preferred for his reception. He bores not all the acorn, for, as a rule, he is not a vegetarian. His object in storing away the acorn exhibits foresight and knowledge of results more akin to reason than to instinct. The scrambling winner the acorns remain inured, but, becoming saturated, is predisposed to decay, when it is noticed by maggots, who seem to delight in this special food. It is then that the woodpecker reaps the harvest his wisdom has provided, at a time when, the ground being covered with snow, he would experience difficulty otherwise in obtaining suitable or palatable food. It is a subject of speculation why the redwood cedar or the sagapine is invariably selected. It is not probable that the insect the woodpecker is on food or is found only on the outside of two trees, but true it is that in Calaveras, Mariposa, and other districts of California trees of this kind may be seen covered all over their trunks with acorns, when there is not an oak tree within several miles.

A Perfect Philosopher.

"I surprised at a country hotel in Arkansas some time ago," said a well-known traveling man, "and behind the clerk's desk, I noticed a rope hanging from a rafter. The rope had a knot on the lower end, and at first I thought that it must be used for hanging purposes. While I was pondering, a man came down stairs approached the clerk's desk and said:

"'Way in thunder didn't you send that pitcher of water to my room? I ought to send yet.'

"The clerk took the end of the rope in his mouth, chewed it a moment or so and, in a cordial voice, replied:

"'It was an oversight, my dear sir. Will attend to it at once.'

"A few minutes later another man came up and said:

"'I want to know if I am to have a fire in my room? If you don't intend to have one mode, say so, and I'll walk you all over this house.'

"The clerk seized the rose again and chewed it. Then turning to the frowning man, he replied:

"'You must really pardon me, sir. I will go up and make the fire myself.'

"'Want a strange man your clerk is,' I said to the proprietor of the hotel.

"'He's a great philosopher,' the proprietor replied. 'Do you know what he generally does when he gets a knock-down?'

"'No.'

"'Well, he would have shot those men. When a man gets mad he grits his teeth, and then smiling an satisfaction, he adopts violent means. Some time ago, a fellow, just for mischief, slapped behind the desk and cut the rope and then, before the clerk had noticed his loss, the fellow made some complaint. The clerk wheeled around, grasped the rope and, before the fellow knew what ailed the clerk, seized the offender and almost killed him.'

"'He is a remarkable man.'

"'The most consistent and obedient man in the world so long as he is in working order. Some time ago the proprietor of a large hotel came here and after witnessing a few performances, offered the clerk a large salary to leave me and go with him, but I raised his salary and succeeded in holding him. Look at him, get the rope in his mouth again. Do you see how much of the rope is wound above? Well, as soon as he chews the knot off the end he lets down the rope and ties another knot. Within the past six months, he has worn out three sets of teeth. See that in a with the small pipe-stem? He is a dentist and has come around to work on the clerk's teeth. I'll tell you what's a fact, that fellow is the most perfect philosopher I ever saw."—Arkansaw Traveler.

THE INDUSTRIAL OUTLOOK.

The Illinois State Labor Commission was in session during the week at Decatur. P. J. Quinn, of Chicago, was elected President, and A. C. Cameron, of Chicago, Treasurer. The murder of the Chicago policemen by anarchists was denounced. The report of Chairman Cameron, of the State Executive Committee, gave notice of the failure to secure satisfactory legislation on the eight-hour and track abuses, and on the prison-contract system, and recommended that workmen vote for the constitutional amendment abolishing the system at the fall elections.

One thousand miners in the Broad Top region, near Pittsburgh, struck for an advance to 50 cents per ton.

The Knights of Labor, at the fifth day's session of their convention, adopted a petition to Congress concerning the regulation of the currency, being the same petition passed at the annual session held in Hamilton, Canada, last October. The petition asks Congress to "take from the hands of the banks and corporations, which, while profiting by it, are the bitterness of life to the people, by the fluctuations of the value of money in various parts of the Union from 2 to 20 per cent, and charge the control of the currency to the national banks. It continues: We pray that your honorable body will limit the duties imposed upon you by the Constitution to Section 8 of Article 1, which provides that Congress shall have power to coin money and regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin, and fix the standard of weights and measures; that you fix the measure of value by establishing a just, uniform, and invariable rate of interest for money loaned; that in order to maintain such rate of interest as the normal rate, you repeal all laws authorizing private persons or corporations to issue money, and in their stead establish public banks offices throughout the country where money, at least one in every county, with proper officers to perform the duties of such offices, that the National treasury must lend money to the people at said offices on good and sufficient security, and at said fixed rate of interest on demand, and that the profits arising from the business of lending said money be covered into the public treasury for public uses, and that said loan offices be also made depositories for the savings of the people, and your petitioners will ever pray."

There was a good deal of wrangling during the sixth day's session of the Knights of Labor convention. The first open attack upon Mr. T. V. Powderly was made in the convention. His enemies charged that he was scheming to become Governor of Pennsylvania and that he was running the order on Roman Catholic principles. To these charges the General Master Workman entered a denial, claiming that a clique, backed by outside influence, was attempting to disrupt the order.

The boycott instituted at Milwaukee against two cigar factories has resulted in the unconditional surrender of a committee of the Executive Committee of the Knights of Labor in charge of conspiracy.

T. V. Powderly sent a special messenger from Cleveland to Pittsburgh with a letter asking the Amalgamated Iron and Steel Workers' Association to become a district assembly of the Knights of Labor.

Services in honor of the dead heroes of the war were held in the several cemeteries of Washington after a parade of regular troops and Grand Army posts. A large number of crosses and other flowers was sent from the White House to Mount Vernon, to decorate the tomb of Washington.

The day was generally observed throughout the Northwest with orations and the decoration of soldiers' graves. In many places the graves of the Federal and Confederate dead were decorated alike. The celebration at Joliet, Ill., was quite elaborate. The Rev. J. W. Conley delivered an oration in which he said that Jeff Davis was as George III to Washington, as Judas Iscariot to Christ, and as Satan to God.

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

The tenth and last day's session of the General Assembly of the Knights of Labor, at Cleveland, Ohio, was a veritable love-feast, and every member who had said anything against any other member extended the hand of fellowship. Before adjournment an address was offered and adopted inviting all labor organizations to unite with the Knights of Labor in the struggle against the tyranny of wealth. The address, in closing, says:

We have received a communication from a committee of the national affiliated trades, the national and international trades unions, requesting certain special legislation at our hands, but as we believe that the object sought for is attainable by presents to the consideration of our order, referred to them but to accomplished by a combination of our forces, through the medium of the assembly and a complete of our order organization, and as the responsibilities and duties are inseparable with our duty to our members, we therefore defer action upon said request, and invite conference with committee, on assembly grounds.

The basis upon which we believe an agreement can be reached would necessarily include the adoption of some plan by which all labor organizations could be protected from unjust aggression expected, suspended, under the laws of our order, and the moral support of our order for those services the claim of trades. In the case of Mrs. Elizabeth the Pennsylvania, we ask a personal thing to interfere, but we are dealing with principles and not practices." The position of Mr. Frank Roberts, of California, General Master Workman, and Mr. Hickey, of Illinois, in regard to the district boycott, Mich. Adolph Sigel, of New York, Chairman of the Knights of Labor, during the debate in the House of Representatives on the subject of the Chicago anarchists proposed to which he said: "We shall think of black every boycotting boycotting boycotting and I, Mr. Speaker, Approval is withheld in these cases on the ground that the decision of the Executive Board of the Knights of Labor had thereon in causes existing prior to the adoption of the process for whose services the claim of trade

THE JOURNAL.

CHARLEVOIX, - MICHIGAN.

MR. MANNING RESIGNS.

On account of failing health, Daniel Manning, secretary of the treasury, has sent his resignation to the president, in the course of which he outlines the financial policy of the government, in the following language: "The reforms in our fiscal policy which you have maintained, and which have been framed and commended to the wisdom of the legislative branch, are reforms necessary to our safety, binding in honor, obligatory in the the traditions of the democracy, set down with promises in our statute book. Our present tariff laws are a needless oppression instead of an easy burden. Our currency is a chaos, in which we pour upon forced purchases of one of the precious metals a mechanical increment, under a coinage law so ill judged and untimely, that it hinders the opening of our lands to the natural and unlimited coinage of both metals and the free expansion of our gold and silver coin, along with the growing needs of a mighty people. All our needful customs revenue might be collected by strictly revenue duties upon a few score articles instead of by extravagant or prohibitory duties upon more than 4,000 articles. The mere machinery of administration by its own mass and complexity breaks down and crushes on the enterprise it assumes to protect. A better currency than obtains elsewhere exists nowhere and has been of repealing and empowering legislation, followed by two or three years of capable administration of the treasury, and joined with the present sagacious conduct of our foreign policy by the state department. Under the operation of currency laws and tariff laws now in force, which you and the forty ninth congress were elected by the people to repeal and reform, the burdened industries of our country are plunging heavily along a miry road toward foreseen danger. We talk of arbitrating our respective share of disaster, instead of knocking off our self-imposed fetters and releasing a general prosperity. This is not, in my deliberate judgment, a time when the president can delay to provide or afford to dispense with an actual as well as a titular head of the treasury department. The fiscal policy of the federal government in respect to a debt so large, taxation so pervasive, and a currency which is universal, cannot fail of being a chief factor in national and individual well being. Your own duty to which you have addressed yourself with such clear and unflinching purpose, the duty of congress in the premises and the laws which may yet be enacted for the guidance of the treasury department, will require that you be assisted in their administration by an officer capable of full efficiency and unwearied circumspection."

In a brief letter the president urges Mr. Manning to accept a leave of absence until October 1st, to give himself a chance to recover his health, and to give the president more time to consider all the circumstances in case Mr. Manning is still determined to retire from the cabinet.

NOTES AND NEWS.

In a recent interview with Mr. L. C. Storrs, secretary of the state board of corrections and charities, a reporter of the Saginaw Evening News discovered that the long established custom of bringing pauper children into this state from eastern states to find homes, is working more harm than good to the state. We have in Coldwater a school for the care and education of our own waifs, and the history and supervision of each is so complete that one happens to get into a home not just suited to its needs, the defect can be remedied, while in the case of these children from the east, with no immediate care or supervision, if the home prove unsatisfactory, the children are likely to run away and mingle with and grow up among vagabonds and criminals, and in that way do our state a positive damage. In the interview Mr. Storrs protested vigorously against filling our state with these children, one paragraph of which we copy as follows: "I think it should be discouraged, for many reasons. With the greatest care mistakes can be taken to get the children from distant states into good homes, mistakes will be made; the children not properly placed will soon become discouraged and perhaps runaway, and doubtless become paupers or criminals, increasing by just so many these classes of our state, already too large. Then, too, our state, at great expense, has provided for and is fitting by the excellent training in Coldwater of our own poor children for the homes, and has provided by the county agency system for an oversight of them after being placed, that any mistakes made may be corrected, and so every influence surrounding them shall fit them for useful lives in the future."

The Boyne Statesman's mention last week of the marriage of President Cleveland and Miss Folsom was in keeping with that paper's usual indecent assaults upon people of prominence. How proud the people of Boyne City must be of their local paper!

Notwithstanding bitter opposition, L. P. Swineford has been confirmed as governor of Alaska.

My native land! land dry cabin homes, Amid thy palaces, a demon roams: Frenzied with rage, yet subtle in his wrath, He crushes thousands in his fiery path: Stalks through our cities unabashed, and throws into the cup of sorrow bitter woes; Gives to pangs of grief an added smart, With keenest anguish rings the breaking heart; Drags the proud spirit from its envied height, And bundles on foulest hopes a killing blight; Heralds the shroud, the coffin, and the pall, And the graves thicken where his footsteps fall!—Tis rum.

The Library Magazine.

One hardly appreciates the vast amount of valuable and interesting matter which is contained in the Library Magazine, if he sees it in weekly form only, when its several issues are brought together in monthly parts, it presents an array of valuable and timely articles that is fairly astonishing. The part for June contains a score of important papers selected from the best current literature, British and American, besides which there are the departments of "Books and their Authors" and "Literary Notes and Comments," which contain nothing but hondsed notices and notes. It is doubtful if any other magazine, in Europe or America, furnishes so much valuable and interesting reading, even at five times its cost, which is only $5.00 a year. John R. Alden, Publisher, 730 Pearl St., New York.

Cure for Piles.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has contracted a cold, or has a slight attack of the grippe. A dull pain in the region of the kidneys is present, followed, sometimes by the shooting, etc. A moisture, like perspiration, producing a very disagreeable itching, after getting warm, is a common attendant. Blind, bleeding and protruding piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Pitts' Pile Ointment. It relieves instantly, opens the parts affected, allowing the tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure. Price 50 cents, and $1 per box. 152

Only 35 Cents.

So confident are we that Dr. Pitts' 35 cent Cough Cure will not disappoint the most sanguine expectation of a single broken-down consumptive located, that we warrant it. Had we not the most perfect confidence in its virtues, we would not think of offering it to sell. Sold by Perry Weed and H. G. W. Crosier.

A Reliable Article.

T. S. Hansley, greenback missionary, made the Journal a pleasant call last Friday. He reports a strong sentiment in favor of fusion throughout the state this fall.

Foot ball, as played on Bridge street is getting to be a nuisance, but it will probably take a few more frightened ladies and broken windows to convince the players of the fact.

On account of light fishing here Joe Lincoln has shut up Davis & Co.'s house here, and gone to Sault Ste. Marie. The Sea Wing went to Thompson until further orders.

More reading than is given in 10 cent books that sell for a dollar each, is given for one dollar for a year's subscription to the Chicago Weekly Herald. Orders received at this office.

W. B. Taylor has done a fine job of fencing and lawn work, in front of the Sanitarium; when the grass gets well started, that bluff will show a vast improvement over its surroundings.

The fishing business is panicky and unprofitable, and a good many are pulling out their nets and closing their business. Fish are way down in prices, and nearly every day going lower.

The Antrim County Independent published at Mancelona, is the latest candidate for public favor. It is a six column folio, containing a good local page. D. C. Ashman, editor and publisher.

Pat Flanigan recently caught two loons which had become entangled in the fish nets in thirty fathoms of water. One of them was mounted by Fred Cochran, and may be seen in Perry Weed's front window.

The special election on Monday brought out a very light vote, but was carried by 36 majority. Village Clerk Harsha is in correspondence with several firms, intending to letter the proposition for supplying fire apparatus, if possible.

Two of Jos. Benavais' boys got down between the logs at Nicholls' mill boom on Tuesday, and were fished out more dead than alive, but were finally resuscitated. This is the third time one of them has been in the water this spring.

A. J. Mudge has erected a street lamp on the corner by his grocery, the outside frame of which was made by L. D. Bartholomew & Co., and is equal to many that cost twice as much. It is an example worthy of emulation elsewhere about town.

Miss Hannah Bell, teacher at Black's school house, reports the following pupils neither absent or tardy during the month of May: Jennie Black, Hattie Thompson, Edith Beers, Rosie Straw, Willie Meggison, Willie Black, Robert Meggison, Thomas Meggison.

Frank Wood has nearly completed some important additions and improvements to his bath-rooms, and repainted and generally renovated his barber shop and billiard parlor. He has two bath rooms, so arranged as to give tub or shower baths with hot or cold water as desired. Altogether the outfit is very complete.

Every few days evidence comes to hand that a small newspaper well filled is more satisfactory to the messes of the people, than a large one indifferently conducted. The latest example is the Grand Rapids Telegram-Herald, which in seven weeks has reached a daily average circulation of over four thousand copies.

To show the extent to which dry plate photography is carried in the west, the St. Louis Photographer grants a statement that one firm in that city has just ordered $45,000 worth of best English glass, and another firm $75,000 for a single order. This is rather more than our friend Bradbeer buys at one time, yet he manages to use a large amount during a season.

Will Rogers, of East Jordan, died at the residence of his uncle, in Charlotte, last Wednesday, June 2d, aged 28 years. In mentioning the occurrence, the Charlotte Republican said: "Mr. Rogers was formerly a resident of this city but has been living in East Jordan for the past few years. He will be remembered as a bright young man of exemplary character and was respected by all who knew him. The funeral takes place to-day."

Good Flour.

We are in receipt of a sack of very fine flour from the Rifenburg Milling Company, of Charlevoix, Mich. It is made out of good wheat by the "roller process" and will never fail to please the most critical housewife. We are told that this company have established an agency here and are building up a good trade. We advise our neighbors to buy a sack and try it effectually. It costs no more than any other brand and is made nearer home. Our rule is to patronize home manufactures as far as possible.—Manistique Pioneer.

The Maxwells.

This company advertised "Uncle Tom's Cabin," for last night, but on their arrival yesterday, concluded to change to "Ingomar." They were greeted by a full house, and although many expected to see Uncle Tom, no one expressed any regrets at the change. The play is new to our people, but the Maxwells made it decidedly interesting. To-night they play "Streets of New York."

The Great German Doctor.

The remarkable phase in the practice of Dr. Peter W. Schmidt (frequently called Dr. Peter), he never asked one to describe their disease, his intuitive perceptions being so strong he can tell any one their trouble without asking a question. His success is phenomenal. His practice enormous. He is sought after by hundreds who come for miles, because he cures when every physician and remedy has failed. The giving of his cross or divine, Golden Seal Bitters, which has made his great success, to the world marks a new era in medicine. Blood, liver, kidneys, nervous system, lungs, heart, stomach and bowels, and the wonderful cures are regarded as phenomenal, but the proof of faith ever says, "What has been may be again." We say to the sick and discouraged give Golden Seal Bitters a trial. It is all we ask. They will speak for themselves. Sold by Perry Weed and Dr. G. W. Crosier.

BUTTER AND EGGS WANTED

THE IMPOSSIBLE.

Man cannot draw water from an empty well,
Nor trace the skeins that gossips tell.
Nor gather the sounds of a passing bell.

Man never can stop the hitiom a star,
Nor change the winds till they blow no more,
Nor drive from love from a maiden's door.

Man cannot contain a flowing ice,
Change his wheat to a field of rye,
Nor call back years that have long gone by.

Man cannot a cruel word recall,
Either a thought, be it great or small,
Nor honey extract from a drop of gall.

Man never can bribe old Father Time,
Gain the prize that he cannot climb,
Nor trust the hand that hath done a crime.

Man never can the backward turn the tide,
Nor count the sands that are scattered wide,
Nor find in a fool a trusty guide.

Man cannot reap fruit from worthless seed,
Pity for strength on a broken reed,
Nor gain a heart he hath caused to bleed.

Man never can hope true peace to win,
Pleasure without and joy within,
Living a thoughtless life of sin.

ANYBODY.

A fading spinster, lone and lorn,
Upon a summer's night,
Was sighing and sighing for persons
With all her maiden might.

Beneath her window passed an owl;
In sober dignity,
Improving the fair landscape
From perch on apple tree.

Applauding remains our that roof,
Who by that window sate,
Thoughtlessly heard "Who? who? who?"
Cried "Any one, O fate?"

TRAILED BY BLOODHOUNDS.

BY CAPTAIN JAMES MONTFORD.

"The person who passed through the war without meeting with adventures that thrilled his blood, or mysteries which chilled it, must have been a very queer individual."

"We all met with adventures, Colonel," I replied. "but they flitted past so quickly that they became obliterated by the stirring events which came after."

"Tut! tut! I must have a better memory than other people," the old gentleman said, smiling; "for scarcely a day passes but some circumstances is recalled to my mind."

"Then it is your duty to supply the deficiencies of your friends."

"Well, I think the most horrid action I was concerned in took place a few days before the battle of Perryville. There was a negro teamster attached to our company, who was one of the principals. He was a tall, raw-boned fellow, with a countenance of mingled brutality and cunning.

"He was stubborn and unmanageable to a degree, and we had a good deal of trouble with him at different times.

"It was always necessary to place a 'boss' over him, and even then willful mistakes were always occurring.

"One day he was shoeing a horse, a valuable black, belonging to one of the aides, and a sergeant was directing his movements.

"The fellow was sullen, and had completed several mistakes. At last he pared the hoof so close that the blood followed the knife.

"I happened along at that juncture, and the sergeant raise the stick he held in his hand, and brought it down over the black's shoulders.

"The negro turned his head, and cast a look so fierce and vengeful at his chastiser that the latter changed color.

"I shall not soon forget the glance; it expressed all the depravity of his vile nature.

"He did not speak; not even a cry of pain escaped his lips. Resuming his task with the manner of one who desired to complete it as soon as possible, he had soon finished, and, after examining the horse, I walked off.

"The next morning the sergeant was found, stripped in his cloak, dead.

"The vein in his throat had been severed in a horrible manner, and from the position in which he lay it was evident the deed had been done while he was sleeping, and that he had not been allowed an opportunity to do dreadfulness!

"There was not the slightest clew to the perpetrator of this outrage; but it at once occurred to me that the negro teamster was the murderer.

"I did not express my opinion until I had made inquiries and found that the fellow had left the camp.

"One of his acquaintances had the least knowledge of his whereabouts.

"I then made my suspicions known, and a strict search was instituted; but nothing was found to bring home the charge.

"At last one Medill offered a suggestion which, though it was, perhaps, no more than strict justice would permit, has always seemed awful to me.

"It was to trail the murderer with bloodhounds, a practice too often followed in that country.

"There's a gentleman near here,' said Medill, 'who owns a fine pair. They will find him, I'll warrant it, if he's above ground.'

"After some consideration, it was decided that the soldier's suggestion should be followed.

"It was necessary that an example should be made; for murder, like everything else, if it goes unpunished will spread.

"Medill and another were dispatched for the dogs, and they returned about the middle of the forenoon, accompanied by an old negro who had charge of the brutes.

"They were an ugly-looking pair, evidently old, and their bodies slashed with many wounds.

"I could not resist comparing them with the black whom I thought the murderer. They seemed well chosen for their duty.

"They found a scent immediately, but not the right one. They pursued one of the soldiers who stood upon the outside of the group, and it required all the efforts of their black master to restrain them.

"But after considerable difficulty a scent was found, and the negro expressed an opinion that it was the correct one.

"A dozen men, among whom I was one, mounted the swiftest horses in the command, and as the dogs started away with bay tongue we followed.

"It was a plain trail for the first half a dozen miles, and we covered the distance in a very short time.

There was something wonderfully exhilarating in the chase, notwithstanding the nature of the game we had in view.

"There is more or less of the savage in man, and it only requires a proper opportunity for it to display its traits in full strength.

"I experienced the greatest eagerness impatiable in pursuing that poor wretch, and knew from the flushed faces and sparkling eyes of my companions that they felt the same emotion.

"Although we urged the horses forward as fast as they could bear, the dogs were far ahead.

"They came to a halt, however, after we had traversed six miles.

"A narrow creek lay in their path. When we came up they were running up and down the bank, with their noses to the ground.

"We forded the creek, and the dogs failed on the scent.

"'If an a black man,' declared the keeper, his voice trembling with excitement, 'he has waded up the creek; no white man would ever do dat.'

"The dogs circled for the trail, which was found about half a mile up the stream.

"On we went again. In about half an hour we heard a peculiar sound from the dogs.

"'He am treed!' cried the keeper; and we rode rapidly up the mountain at the foot of which we had now arrived.

"We soon came in sight of the dogs, and a small cabin, which seemed deserted.

"The brutes were running about, uttering that strange sound characteristic of them when they have found their game.

"Leaping from our horses, we ran up to the cabin door. It was secured upon the inside, and we had some difficulty in breaking it down.

"As we did so there came a yell from our companion, who had been left to watch on the outside.

"The negro murderer had leaped from a small window in the upper part of the deserted hut, and was now running for life.

"We could not pursue him on horseback as he darted up the rocky slope. He was strong and fleet of foot; none of our hunters could rival him.

"The dogs were tearing about inside, frantic. Their keeper succeeded at last in bringing them to the fresh trail; but then the negro was barely discernible, far up the mountain.

"The fellow was exerting himself to the utmost, and I could not help admiring his pluck, even while straining every muscle in the pursuit.

We clambered up the slope as rapidly as we could, but the negro and his pursuers had passed from our view.

"Suddenly we found again that peculiar sound from the dogs. The murderer was at bay. Perhaps fighting for his life with the fierce hounds.

"We ran forward, almost falling at every step, and several gave up the chase, dropping upon the ground through fatigue.

"I was one of the first who came within view of the strange scene presented at the top of the mountain.

"The dogs were sitting upon their haunches at the foot of a large tree whose limbs hung over a high bluff.

"The negro was hanging upon a limb of the tree. His face was distorted, and his eyes seemed upon the point of dropping from their sockets.

"His clothing hung about him in shreds; his hands were torn and bloody.

"As we came within sight he turned his eyes upon us with the look of a wolf at bay. Then he looked down at the dogs who were yelping a few feet below.

"'Come down,' I cried, and the fellow gave a few feet below.

"'Come down,' I cried, and the fellow rose to his feet, steadying himself with one hand.

"Seeing his movement the dogs rose also; their fierce looks bore evidence of the power with their keeper.

"Standing for an instant upon his insecure perch, the negro glanced around him. A look of desperation upon his face was that of a demoniac; with a cry scarcely human he sprang his form backward, and then leaped far out over the bluff.

"Rushing to the edge, I dropped upon my knees. I saw the form whirl over in the air, then drop from sight.

"We circled the bluff and came upon his mangled body, but

With scarce a shred to tell of human form,
Or fragment for the sod-lord or the worm."

AUCTIONS.

BY ANNIE E. MYERS.

It is a matter of history that women in Babylon were publicly auctioned off to the highest bidder for wives.

This sale occurred annually among those old heathens, at which time all virgins of a marriageable age were required to assemble at a certain place in their respective districts, and thither flocked all the gay and frolicsome young rogues to seek their wives.

No doubt the dauntless flutterer and hobbled around, stopped here and there, put their heads together for confidential confabs, made the most of the scant of the busy bee around an intoxicating clover blossom. The young fellows whose sillies passes were well lined with gold and silver consulted and compared notes as to the comparative beauty of the candidates to come under the auctioneer's hammer, gauging attention to the probabilities in regard to the dispositions and tempers of the respective mothers-in-law elect, while the dusky swain whose bidding must be more modest, and whose tastes and desires must be regulated to enjoy what may be left, passed quietly yet observingly around, mingling freely in the midst of the excited throng, silently picking up points and waiting their chances, after the fashion of the hunger-as around the wheat-pit in the Chicago Board of Trade.

The style of conducting this Babylonian sale was quite American in its main points, but perhaps on a fairer basis than Jonathan's "squat" whose.

The most beautiful was put up first, and he who bid the most money gained possession of her. The second in appearance followed, and the bidders grabbed themselves away as fast as possible.

But, alas! Strange as it may appear to modern civilization—our civilization in which every girl may become a wife if she can satisfy herself with what the gods provide—among the Babylonians there weren't some ladies for whom no money was offered.

It seems that physical beauty alone was the one thing desired in a wife. Those benighted heathen had not acquired the taste that could appreciate the esthetic loveliness of even protoplasmic psychology. But the pages dogs had all the inventive genius of a maneuvering modern mamma, consequently when all the beautiful virgins were sold the error ordered the least handsome to stand up, when he would demand who would marry her with a dowry sum, then who with a smaller sum-out, until she would finally be adjudged to the one who would be satisfied with the least. In this manner the money paid as premiums for beauty served as bribes for disagreeable looks.

The custom emanated from the minds of idol worshipers, at least one hundred years before Christ came with His enlightening religion, but in what movement of reform in what solution of mystifying social questions has a more humanitarian decree been adopted?

The contemplation of this unique sketch of diplomacy has suggested a modern adaptation.

Why would it not be a neat manner of disposing of our old maids?

Use the premiums obtained from the sale of the heedless young and old bachelors who seem incapable of getting married themselves, as bribes to hasten the disposal of marriageable men whose wives are anxious to get rid of them.

Until a man is married his failings are not observable, he is an adorable object in the eyes of all femininity, unless he wears green goggles or pants his hair in the middle, and most of them would go off under the auctioneer's hammer like a dozen hot cakes in a restaurant, and the man realizing would be sufficiently large to greatly accelerate the disposal of the unfortunates whose wives have disclosed to the public their heretofore hidden deformities—men are so deceiving.

If a man's sale were to occur at this season of the year, the man who is never satisfied with the house he and his wife may happen to think the rent too high, or the repairs not properly attended to by the landlord—the man whose wife is obliged to keep her chair legs in canvas casings to be in readiness for the semi-annual housecleaning—the man whose wife would probably require to be accompanied by the largest dollar.

If not him, it would be the man whose wife is snubbed out of all glimmer of the most elementary self-assertion. The bride-groom is crafty and knowing he's worth need a large pattern to make him salable, the unique is a beautiful bridal garment with the amount required to launch the man who is able to purchase and subdue his wife—in public.

It is reasonable that, among those deformed and unsatisfactory husbands, he who could be disposed of with the least ready cash would be the man who has been six clubs and lodges and had to "mortgage a friend" to raise the cash, but who, with a medicine of grumbling, provides a liberal allowance for the new spring bonnet trimmed with a profusion of the flowers that bloom in the best conservatories of far.

A Cat's Nine Lives.

Of the cat it is commonly said, says a writer in Popular Science Monthly, that it has nine lives. By this saying nothing very definite is meant beyond the opinion that under various kind of treatment the cat has more chances of other animals that have to be killed by violent means. When any question is asked of the police or of those persons who have to take the lives of lower animals, they tell you, without exception, according to my experience, that the cat is the most difficult to destroy of all domestic animals, and that it endures accidental blows and falls with an immunity that is quite a distinguishing characteristic.

The general impression conveyed in these cases is strictly correct up to a certain and well-marked degree. By the latest death the value of the life of the cat is found to be at least three times the worth of the dog. In all the cases that come to my knowledge the comparisons were made the cat outlived the dog. A cat and dog of the same ages being placed in a lethal chamber, the cat died last, with perfect certainty, be predicted to outlive the dog. The lethal chamber being large enough to hold both the cat and the dog, the vapor inhaled by the animals being the same, with every other condition identical, the result, as an experimental truth, may be accepted without cavil.

The differences, always well marked, are sometimes much longer than would be credible in the absence of evidence. I have once seen a cat falling asleep in a lethal chamber in the same period as a dog, remain breathing, literally, nine times longer, for the dog died in five minutes, and the cat not only continued to breathe in profounded sleep for forty-five minutes, but would have been recorable by simple removal from the vapor into fresh air, if it had been removed while yet one set of breathing continued. This, however, was exceptional, because the cat in the same lethal atmosphere as the dog does not, as a rule, live more than thrice as long—i. e. if the dog ceases to breathe in four minutes, the cat will cease in from ten to twelve minutes after falling asleep.

Novelist Howells and His Dainty Wife.

Howells is a dumpy little man, with a fat nut-brown face, full jaws, has large comic, eyes that ooze a warm, bright light from their hanging lids, and wears the hair parted in the middle and banged squarely and most decidedly on his forehead. The man has a touch of nature that makes all women's hearts kind to him. He is unaffected, walks with a little limping dangling gait most fetching, and has boyish manners hard to resist. Howells and these stories of his Boston novelettes are, Mrs. Howells, his dainty little wife, looks like a precious lot of old china, like a fragile, cream-tinted cup, engraved all over with blue Trojan sonnets, "scenes," Charles Lamb would say, "through the hazel atmosphere of far Cathay."—Washington letter to the Savannah News.

THEY begged him to play a little. He seemed to feel no inclination at first, after a while he began to play vigorously. "What power!" and a listener to the owner of the piano. "Yes!" exclaimed the latter in alarm, "he seems to have considerable muscle; but he ought to know that this isn't a gymnasium."

LIFE is like a pack of cards. Childhood's best cards are hearts; youth is captured by diamonds; middle age is conquered with a club, while old age is raked in by the insatiable spade.

The True Ministry of the Kiss.

Of the great needs of American home life to-day, a hearty, sincere, and frequent manifestation of affection stands at the head. Thousands of families there are in which never a kiss is exchanged. The day is lagum and cold by all, from the father to the five-year old, in the same heartless fashion. No wonder the years rapidly take their faces in the "long ago."

Yet what can stay so many sorrows as the hearty kiss of true affection? Does mamma's kiss possess such wonderful curative power for the baby, and they think I have no power of healing for the mother?

Boys, kiss your mothers. It won't break the heart that has endured the strain of ceaseless vigil and care through all the years of your infantile tenderness, and the later years of your hasty, heedless, heartless helplessness. Try it some day. Many a boy has risen to noble renown by the self-sacrifice of a widowed mother. He is proud of your success, and asks no other reward for this heavy struggle than the hearty affection of an appreciative soul. Don't deprive her of that slight recompense, my boy. Should the cloud become so heavy as to take her from your sight, you will never have another mother. The law may give a man a dozen wives; heaven can give him but one mother. Your love that is too big to kiss his mother is too small to kiss anybody else. Girls, beware of him! Such boys fairly paint with anxiety to attend every occasion that may afford them opportunity to kiss some butterfly, whose chief accomplishments may be little waist (no reference to economy) and big bustle—not of useful activity, but of paper.

I know, my boy, your mother's voice may lack the low melody of your "last dance," but it will ring with the sense of unselfish affection long after your "flame" has been lost and the aches of selfishness. Your mother may not be able to vie with some girl you know in cooking, with a wealth of affectionate objectives and languishing attitudes, a pug-nosed dog or rabbit-tailed cat. But with arms and body strong superior to the pain and aches that tortured her years, she carried you night and day in the lingering sickness of your infancy, she pressed you to her heart and covered with kisses your face, every while made so repulsive with foul disease that your fair chance, who daily divides her affections, between you and her dog, would have turned away in disgust. But, then, her arms have been a nobler burden, her heart is filled with a holier love, her mind occupied with a loftier ideal, else you would not be where you are to-day. Then kiss the dear old face, deeply seamed with care for you. Don't wait till that loving smile, shrouded by death, can only be impressed upon your heart forever. The noblest and highest ordeal of your future is enabled in your power to-day.

Girls, kiss your fathers. Make the glad every day that their patient toil has such affectionate reward. Show, each time of you, that you appreciate your father. His tremulous hand may not be as fair and smooth as the "lily" hand of the dude seeking your smile. His aged form may not be as erect as the brainless fop who impudently seeks permission to take you to a new home, there to surround you with every luxury—at your father's expense. His trembling may not be as comedly regular as that of your last correspondent, but that a raving signature on the corner of an old envelope will drain more money out of the bank in a minute, than your admiring Adonis' compliplate, written in the sweetest of poetic of foolhesp, can in ten years.

Then, each kiss imprinted on that whitening brow may help you to remember that your parents won't be with you forever. The sand in life's hourglass is completing the circuit of life's dial; each passing day brings nearer the season for flight; each growing infirmity is a plunging of the wings; by-and-by the mellow dusk of life's autumn will lure the gentle spirit from its clayey tenement. Then the heavy blooom of the glory-land. Then will settle over the old homestead the blight of a poverty which no wealth can banish. So strengthen the soul and cheer the spirit of your father and mother by the affection of to-day; and if, by reason of early privation and disadvantage (from which they have carefully guarded their children), you breathe the purer atmosphere of better times, know that the frequent kiss of loving appreciation is the magical power by which you may daily lift the hearts of your parents to the heights upon which their loving self-denial has placed you.—Rev. Henry B. Hudson.

He Remembered.

"Now, pa, dear," said a Hartford girl, you will do just one or two little errands for me to-day, won't you?"

"Why, certainly, my dear."

"Oh, that's ever so good a pa. You just match these seven colors in worsted, buy me three good cucumber needles, you know what kind, and a—a package of earwax."

"All right, my dear. I'll remember the cucumbers." And that was all he intended to remember.—Hartford Post.

SIR WILFRID WILLIAM WINNE talking to a friend about the authority of his family, which he carried back to Noah, was told that he was a mere mushroom of yesterday. "How so, pray?" asked the baronet. "Why," exclaimed the other, "when I was in Wales, a peasanry of a particular family was shown me; it filled five large skins of parchment, and near the middle of it was a note in the margin: 'About this time the world was created.'"—St. Louis Magazine.

A Great Find.

The agent of a dime museum, who had been sent out by the proprietor with a roving commission to replace a leading attraction who had lately married another freak, and gone out of the show business, came upon a Long Island farmer.

"Anything unusual in the fish about this vicinity?" he inquired.

"Naw, nuthin' out o' ordinary," replied the old man. "Leastways that they bites more one day than they does t'other."

"Didn't you ever hook a big fish that pulled you, overboard, and towed you across to the other side of the lake?"

"Naw, never died."

"Didn't you ever see the fish so hungry that they jumped right into your boat to get at the bait?"

"Naw, can't say that I did."

"Didn't you ever see the lake so full of fish that you had to get out of your boat and shove it along over their backs?"

"Naw, don't think I ever did."

"Never caught a fish that had swallowed a precious gem of untold wealth?"

"Sayy, does I look os if I had?"

"How long have you been fishing, anyhow?"

"Nigh onter sixty year, man and boy."

Late Hours For Children.

The old adage of

"Early to bed and early to rise Makes a man healthy and wealthy and wise," is true of children even much more than of grown persons, from the fact that their entire systems are much more susceptible to the evil action of anything not in complete harmony with the laws of health. The mind as well as the body requires its intervals of rest in order to recuperate after exertion. Exercise of the mind destroys or decomposes a portion of the cells of the brain, for it is only by the action of these brain cells that we can have thought, just as it is only by the action of the cells of the muscular tissue that we can have motion of any portion of the body. During the waking hours the brain cells are continually in action, sometimes one part and sometimes another, according to circumstances. During the time this waste of brain tissue is going on there is also a counter action of repair, but not sufficient to supply the loss without an interval of cessation in the process of destruction, in order that the reparation process may catch up, and thus make the thinking properties of the brain as good as before. And in the case of children it must even do more than repair the damage, it must make the brain stronger than before; for the child's brain is continually growing, in order that the mind may be stronger, and thus be prepared for the necessities of the future, when greater things will be required of it. And again the child's brain is very tender and not inured to hardships like that of the adult. It cannot be knocked and dashed about with impunity like that of a strong and vigorous man, nay more than the body of a child can endure the hardships of the "horny handed sons of toil."

There are five avenues to the mind through which it receives messages or impressions from the outer world. These are designated the five senses; viz. seeing, hearing, smelling, tasting and feeling. While these avenues are all open it is almost impossible for any other than a thoroughly exhausted mind to obtain the necessary rest for recuperation, for the messages are coming in from each of these five senses, and the mind is kept as busy as a telegraph operator who is listening to the messages from five different lines at one time.

It is therefore a wise provision of nature that she shuts off the light of day once in every 24 hours, bringing on a condition of darkness which closes the main avenue to the mind, that of sight. This in turn causes a cessation of labor, and thus closes, in a measure, another of the avenues. For when labor stops noise stops, and without noise there is no hearing. Under these circumstances there is not likely to be anything brought within reach of the organ of smell or taste, which shuts these off. This leaves nothing but the sense of feeling, and as this sense acts but slightly except through the influence of movements, and movements have already practically ceased, we have the various avenues all practically closed except as they are continued through artificial means.

Thus we see that nature has provided the very best means to bring about the desired condition to permit this required rest before the mind is too much exhausted.

We see, too, why it is best that the mind should obtain rest during the hours of darkness, as provided by nature. Perfect rest can be obtained only under these conditions. When sleep occurs at other times it is only partly satisfactory, and sometimes the person feels more weary after such sleep than before.

It is a noted fact than persons who work at night and sleep in the daytime soon break down in health, and it is almost sure to be by some nervous disease, being frequently what is known as neurasthenia or nervous prostration; more especially is this the case if the person is of a nervous temperament.

Children, whose brains are much more tender than those of adults, need their rest at the proper time, or great damage may be done them, both in dwarfing their minds, and in causing diseases of the nervous system, which may either produce death or lay the foundation for life-long misery.

The people of America are much more prone to nervousness and nervous diseases than any other nation, and undoubtedly one great cause is, that they are allowed while children to keep late hours. Their parents love to make little men and women of them when they are in reality only babies.

Children require also much more rest than adults, because they have not only to recuperate the tissues which have been used up, but they must furnish enough that the mind may grow and become larger than before. Hence the child must have a great deal more rest and sleep than the adult, in order that nature may have more time in which to accomplish this greater work.

When we allow our children to remain up in the evening as long as grown people, we are not only sowing seeds for their future misery by a deranged nervous system (a condition which can produce more pain and suffering than any other), but we are robbing them of the growth of brain, thus rendering their intellects, making them less intelligent than nature would otherwise make them. And all this simply for gratification for short hours. Oh, the selfishness! oh, the stupidity, the sinfulness of the parent who thus treats the poor innocent child. In many cases it would be more charitable to lect on the brains with a club and thus end its misery forever.

The practice of taking children to a theatre, to balls, sup-pers, etc., where they have to remain up until a late hour, is entirely contrary to nature, and the excuse that the children "like to go," and "I don't like to refuse them anything which I myself enjoy," simply shows that the child has been allowed to require an unnatural habit which should be discontinued immediately. It is only perfectly natural for children to be sleepy and want to go to bed soon after their evening meal, which should be soon after dark in the winter, and a little before dark in the long days of summer.

The practice of giving children's parties in the evening where they are taught to act like miniature men and women is so contrary to nature that I wonder it was ever allowed by a civilized human being. Let them have afternoon parties on the lawn or somewhere where they can play and romp all they please, and have a good time. If this sills their live clothes, it is better that they should be soiled, than you can have others made that are more suitable. But at any rate, let them be children while they are children, for it is only in this way they are perfectly happy. Don't unclothe to make the work of nature, for nature's works are God's works, and he who undertakes to undo the works of God is sure to accomplish miserable ruin. Nature's laws are God's laws, and he who disobeys them disobeys God just as surely as when he breaks the Ten Commandments. Nature's revelations are God's revelations, and he who refuses to study nature, refuses to study God's truths just as surely as when he refuses to study the bible. [Florence M. King.

Hoyt of Columbus, Ohio; delegates to the National Reformers of Trades and Labor Unions, J. H. Winders, San Francisco; I. Wright, Washington, D. C.; J. Scott, Baltimore. Ex-President John M. Farquhar, of Rochester, N. Y., was defeated for Buffalo, made a short address, in which he took strong grounds against uniting with the Knights of Labor. President Stevens, in his address was only a small fraction of printers who were in favor of such a move. George W. Childs and A. J. Drexel, of Philadelphia, so the convention $10,000, to be used in a statewide manner for publishing any one bill, for the good of the craft. It was decided to hold the next convention at Buffalo.

Warrants were issued at Pittsburgh last week against Mayor Workman Richard Campbell of the Knights of Labor, and three others for conspiracy and intimidation in connection with the recent street-car strike.

It transpires that General Master Workman Powderly, S. of L., offered his resignation at Cleveland, but the convention would not receive it. He was also proffered a large increase of salary, but declined to accept the advance.

H. D. Davis, Local Master Workman K. of L., was convicted at Union, Mo., of obstructing the track during the railroad strike, and sentenced to two years in the penitentiary.

Reports of the Agricultural Department to the honor house of Congress say the wheat crop of India, Australia, and South America, already increased, are 32,000,000 bushels more than last year, while the product of the United States last year was 30 per cent. last year's yield by fully 100,000,000 bushels. The wheat in the United States May 1 last was 103,000,000 bushels, against 152,000,000 bushels in 1885.

"The President and his bride are the happiest of mortals; there are only thirty newspaper correspondents on hand to mar the love-making," telegraphed a correspondent on Monday last from Deer Park, Md.

The President enjoys a smoke after every repast, and generally paces up and down in front of the porch while he puffs the fragrant Havana. After dinner (we-ha-ha) he came out to the cottage, and, seating himself in the chair, he drew his cigar-case from his pocket and after gazing in it said something to his wife, and the honeymoon bridegroom's countenance lighted with a clear. She glad fully placed a cigar in his mouth, and then, with a smile, a match from the bridegroom, lit his cigar for him, and they both sat down together to smoke, remarks he made. There are hosts of the lovers' sorrow that the newspaper fellows will find out. Well, the newspaper fellows are a clamorous, gallant, and, withal, a good-hearted lot. The story of the bridal stream crowd, which the world tongue mentioned above crowds, I did not see, standing on the side little bridal path accidentally dropped her handkerchief. The President quickly turned to the side of the bridge, as the fair lady, with a little laugh, ran down to meet him with the lost handkerchief in her hand, brought up the handkerchief, and, as she pressed the water out of it, one looked up with a smile of pleasure, a face lit up from both eyes and kissed her tenderly."

FOREIGN.

The British House of Commons has agreed to accept the Government's proposal for the closing on Sunday of every public house in England, except in London and its suburbs.

The second reading of Mr. Gladstone's home-rule bill was defeated in the British Commons on the 7th inst., by a vote of 341 to 311. This is a large majority against the measure that was anticipated either by the Tories or the Liberal and Whig dissentients. The fate of home rule, for the present at least, will be decided by the British and the Irish people at the polls. New elections will be ordered within the next two weeks. In this meantime a political campaign exceeding in intensity and passion any that has ever occurred in the British Islands since the reform campaign of 1832 will be entered on. On one side will be the Tories, Liberal Unionists and privilege, all the influence begotten of centuries of rule and wealth, and on the other the liberalized democracy of Great Britain and Ireland, led by the most eloquent or living man. It will be a tremendous struggle.

The British Cabinet unanimously resolved, at a meeting held on the 8th inst., to appeal to the country. Mr. Gladstone sent a special messenger to Queen Victoria, presumably the dissolution of Parliament about June 28. It is expected that the elections can be held within a month from that date, and that the new session will meet early in August. John Bright was among the 12 cabinet ministers who voted against the home-rule bill. The only Parnellite voting with the Opposition was Captain O'Shea, representing a Galway district.

Further rioting is reported at Belfast. The riot set up again on the 8th. Orangemen began throwing stones at the police, when the latter fired, killing four persons.

The emigration into Manitoba this year is said to be eight times greater than in any other of the last two or three years. Acting Second Comptroller McMaken has rendered a decision that volunteer soldiers who were mustered out and discharged with a regiment or other organization, the numbers of which were kept together and under discipline, and had not yet received their discharge until they were paid off, should be regarded as continuing in service until the day of payment, and are accordingly entitled to credit for that period of service in computing their right to bounty.

Orange riots have broken out in Finlan, County Tyrone, Ireland. Many houses have been wrecked by the mob.

Mr. Gladstone was loudly cheered in the House of Commons (says a London dispatch) on rising to announce the speedy dissolution of the house. And was cheered again at the close of his statement. THE JOURNAL.

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

In Bartow, Fla., recently, four lives were sacrificed in one day to the God of Rum. Two young men under the influence of liquor were making more noise on the street than the police thought good for the place, and in an attempt to stop the brawl two policemen were shot down, one of them instantly killed. The young men fled, but were followed and caught by the sheriff and citizens. The sheriff succeeded in getting them into the jail, but soon after dark between 250 and 300 citizens armed themselves with guns, went to the jail, disarmed the jailer, and dragged out the two murderers and hung them to the nearest tree. The lynchers were the leading men of the town, who did not propose to let public sentiment change while waiting for justice through the slow process of law, and perhaps release the murderers on some technicality.

The Detroit Journal "interviewer" recently met W. B. Wilson, of Muskegon, member of the democratic state central committee for the ninth district, and he gives the following concerning L. G. Mason's chances for congress: "Politically, there isn't much talked of in our vicinity but congressman, and our choice is emphatically and unanimously L. G. Mason. Mr. Mason is a democrat; an honest man, and is possessed of ability that would make itself felt in congress. He has a perfect conception of what the people want, and he has the confidence of the people. If the ninth district shall nominate Mr. Mason, who, by the by, is our present mayor, Gen. Cutcheon, elected two years ago by about 2,700 majority, will be given an opportunity to stay at home and attend to his legal business."

This greenback state central committee have named Aug 17 and 18 the date, and Grand Rapids the place for holding the next convention for nominating state officers.

King Gold.

In an able article on the depression in commercial enterprise, and the consequent downward tendency of prices and wages, the New York Sun says:

What, we may be asked, is the cause of this universal calamity? We answer that in our judgment, it has but one supreme cause, and this is the adherence of the world to the gold standard of money. The amount of gold produced is constantly diminishing, and its value as money is in consequence continually increasing. There is not enough of it to keep prices steady, and hence the enterprise of the world is everywhere stagnant, and the greatest sufferers from the effects of this situation must be the laborers, whose numbers are continually increasing while the demand for their work is not increasing, but the contrary.

Truer words than these have not been penned by any writer on the causes of the present industrial situation. In the briefest possible language the Sun has told the whole story of the trouble with the business and brawn of the country. It is King Gold that is reducing the peoples of the world to hopeless poverty and want.

The young farmers who ran into debt in prosperous times a few years ago for their 40 or 80 acres are to-day trying to pay for their land in money which is worth nearly 50 per cent more than it was when the mortgages, which are plastered over their little homes were placed on record. Labor cannot stand such a crushing load, and it is fast going to the wall.—Lansing Journal.

President-Making by Congress.

Secretary Manning's letter of resignation and President Cleveland's response thereto should sting congress to action such as their unwieldiness utterances in annual report and messages have thus far failed to elicit. From his sick chamber the secretary again warns congress and his public that the hardened industries of the country "are plunging heavily along a miry road to foreseen disaster," under the operation of currency and tariff laws the vices of which they have been in vain brought to reform. A few lines of repealing and empowering legislation are all that congress is asked for in order to secure "a better currency than elsewhere exists," instead of extravagant or prohibitory duties upon more than a thousand articles which pile up a surplus in the treasury, to invite such measures as the free-education scheme and omnibus pension bills, "all our needful customs revenue might be collected by strictly revenue duties upon a few score articles."

For answer the senate passed over two hundred more private pension bills on Saturday while these sentences were still ringing in its ears. And the house, only twenty-four hours before enacted a measure for a tax of 25 per cent ad valorem upon one article for the benefit of another, besides imposing a special tax upon all concerned in its manufacture or sale.

The tone of the president's response, however, leaves no room to doubt what the fate of these and kindred vicious measures will be when they reach his desk. Neither Senator Blair's pension bill nor Representative Hatch's oleomargarine bill has any more chance of the executive approval than the flood of private measures the first waves of which have already been repelled by his sturdy, common sense and steadfast integrity.

Both parties in the XLIXth congress are vying with each other in affording Mr. Cleveland opportunity to make a record for the approval of the country. He could ask no better foil to throw his own actions into bold and shining relief. They are, both republican and democrat, doing what in them lies to make him the next democratic nominee, and most likely his own successor. What will become of them is of less importance.—Chicago News.

Should L. G. Mason, of Muskegon, be the democratic and greenback candidate for congress in the ninth district Hon. Byron M. Cutcheon will not find his re-election a walk-over by any means.—Traverse Eagle.

The Detroit Journal shows its ignorance when it asserts that Michigan democrats are wedded to a single gold standard for money. The Herald knows not that the democratic paper in the state favoring the single standard. On the contrary the democratic press are practically a unit for gold, silver and paper currency, of equal value.—Big Rapids Herald.

The Flint Journal, edited by an old veteran and stalwart republican, says Uncle Joshua Begole could beat H. A. Alger out of his boots in a race for the governorship, on their merits neither to have a boodle. Uncle Joshua is just beginning to be appreciated. The day is coming when he will stand very near the head of Michigan's governors.—Cheboygan Democrat.

It is probable that there will be fusion between the democrats and greenback party in this state, and we shall see some long faces on the part of republicans as they look at the prospects before them. There seems to be an inevitable muddle in that party this year and between the county and city syndicates there is little harmony.—St. Johns Independent.

In many places the friends of law and order are claiming that, where a man swears he is worth a certain amount, tanking him thereby a sufficient surety on a liquor seller's bond, he should be put on the tax roll as being worth the amount stated under oath. Such should be the practice everywhere. If the man is not worth the amount sworn to, then he should be punished for swearing to a barefaced lie. Ex.

The Canadian schooner Nipigon is in trouble at Chicago, she having passed through the straits from Canada without reporting at Cheboygan as required by law. Her captain claims that his boat was leaking, a heavy gale blowing and a fog shut in the harbor and he was afraid to come ashore and pushed on. His boat was seized, and the matter submitted to the secretary of the treasury. The penalty is the forfeiture of the boat and cargo, and we hope the full penalty will be meted out to the vessel's captain. It is about time to show the Canadian authorities that they will not be allowed to seize American vessels on the slightest pretext, with the knowledge that Canadian captains can limit our navigation laws all to pieces, and plead the baby act every time and escape. The captain's excuse for passing Cheboygan was too thin altogether.—Cheboygan Democrat.

Children's Day Exercises.

At the Congregational church last Sunday morning, J. S. Smithson occupied the pulpit in his usual entertaining manner. It needs but the bare announcement that he will speak to fill the house with attentive listeners. For the evening service a concert program was prepared, consisting of responsive readings, music, and recitations. The music was rendered by both choir and congregation, and the recitations as follows, interspersed throughout the exercises:

He Leadeth Me—Georgie Irwin.
He Goeth Before—Artie Kanogy.
The Good Shepard—Clara Eaton.
The Five Brings a' Home—Nettie Kelly.
That Sweet Story—May Suffield.

There was a profusion of birds and flowers in the decorations.

At the M. E. church the services of the entire day were devoted to the little folks, and the decorations were of a nature to be fully appreciated by them. The concert in the evening was held at the hour of the usual young people's meeting, and consisted of addresses, recitations, etc., interspersed with vocal and instrumental music. Chief among the exercises were the following:

Address, "Our Jubilee"—S. C. Reed.
Address of Welcome—Freddie Myers.

The Fourth.

It having been decided that we can have our new steam fire engine by July 1, for a test, our citizens have taken hold of the question of celebrating the Fourth, making as one of the attractions a public exhibition of the working qualities of the new steamer.

A meeting was held last night, committees appointed, and subscriptions taken. The program is being arranged to-day. Another meeting will be held tonight to complete the arrangements.

It is expected that Judge Rice, of Cadillac, will be the orator. Other attractions will be boat racing, games, etc., and a torchlight procession of boats on Round lake in the evening. Program next week.

Congregational Social.

A social for fun and plenty to eat at Bartholomew's opera house, Monday evening, June 21st. Delicacies will be served from 5:30 until 9 p. m., consisting of oranges and cream, strawberries and cream, ice cream and lemonade. (Be sure and bring 10 cents with you for each dish.) The band will enliven the occasion with music a part of the evening. All are invited.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE.

Barnard.

Everything is looking good since the rain.

Isaac Ager raises a large frame barn on his farm today.

Wm. Clark has the job of building the frame bridge on quarter line, section 16, and the work is now in progress.

Isaac Ager started Saturday for Fishkill-on-the-Hudson, to visit his brother.

Nothing Like Being Satisfied.

Traverse City feels big because President Cleveland threatens to visit there this summer; Charlevoix is crowing because Sam Jones the revivalist is booked for that place; and Kalkaska—well, Kalkaska will enter into Belva Lockwood to-morrow, Friday evening, and Belva is a full team all by herself.—Kalkaska Leader.

Fruit, Flowers, and Shrubbery.

A. Brown, of Frankfort, agent for the W. & T. Smith nurseries, Geneva, N. Y., is in town, and may be found at the Bridge street house. His catalogue contains a most magnificent collection of flower and shrubbery, and he warrants everything true to name.

Not "Busted."

We are requested to state that the Boys' Band has not disbanded, as has been reported, notwithstanding the withdrawal of several members. New members will be added, and they will be heard from soon.

Killed by Lightning.

John Adkins, if Eveline, was killed in his bed by lightning last Saturday morning. His wife and child in another bed in the same room were unhurt.

BUTTER AND EGGS WANTED.

THE TARNISHED MEDAL.

BY NATHAN H. CHEEK.

Turning old keepsakes over,
In a passive mood one day,
I chanced on a tarnished medal
Shine glaring bad were away.
Idly I polished the surface,
Regardless of the metal's station,
Which it falsely wore when, years before,
It had formed my hostel prize.

With festival preparations
The country rolled was a-whirl,
And a beautiful maiden
Was offered the boy or girl
Who the greatest number of tickets
Should among the neighbors sell;
And my stirring hard for that bright reward
Yet can remember well.

Early and late on my mission
I wandered from door to door,
Or meeting with naught but failure,
After trudging a mile or more;
But buoyed by the hope of possession,
Still I pushed on before my foes,
Yet make at that was the victory,
And mine the glittering prize.

My joy in my schoolmates' envy,
As I wore it before them all,
Has still with a touch remainder,
Like a sweet, sad dream of
My latter humiliation.
When the medal proved, alas!
Not a worthless toy of the worst alloy—
A bauble of tarnished brass.

And now there comes the reflection
Of how often in life's journey
Do the prizes which that we bear for
Through many a weary stretch;
And how well it is to make certain,
Before we expend our strength,
Of the real worth of the things of earth
That we hope to attain at length.

ONE BRAVE ACT.

BY W. R. S. ATKINSON.

Steamville was just a large railroad town in the West. Built on the ships and yards of the Grand Transcontinental and New Orleans and Idaho Railroad, with their necessary adjuncts, from Steamville, and working themselves, of course, in the image of which we are writing very little did remain in a business way—for a great strike was in progress.

The shop doors were closed on cold fingers, silent furnaces and deserted boilers; the round-houses were filled with dead locomotives; no freight trains moved in or out of the yards or depots. Altogether, Steamville, for the time-being, ill deserved its name.

It is not necessary for us to inquire into the causes which led up to the strike. Whether real or imaginary, a number of the Grand Transcontinental employees declared they had grievances which must be adjusted; so the District Assembly K. of L. ordered out all the freight trainmen of the Grand Transcontinental Railway, together with several of its tributary lines. This, with all subsequent orders emanating from the District Assembly, was signed "JONS HEADFOOT, Master Workman."

General Superintendent Mansel sat alone in his private office, at Steamville head quarters. His duties had altered somewhat in the last few days. Instead of devoting his energies to bringing about the safe and speedy carriage of trains, he now divided his time between telegraphing the Presidents of the road, in Chicago, and interviewing detectives. He was worried a good deal. The fact was, he wished to do the right thing by the men, and at the same time he was not the man, at this critical time, to fall the directors, who trusted him implicitly.

One man—a man he had never seen—Superintendent Mansel cordially disliked, and that was none other than John Headford, the Master Workman whose name appeared at the foot of all the District Assembly documents. It is hardly surprising, perhaps, that the Superintendent—who was a good-hearted, whole-souled man in the main—should have no love for any organizations. The Knights of Labor, District Assembly 246, sub its Master Workman, he absolutely disliked. "Lot of drained scoundrels! lazy, good-for-nothing strikers, those labor agitators and wire-pullers," he would say "trying to make questionable points for the workingmen, and a few dollars for themselves at the same time. There were all our boys working away and well satisfied with everything until along came these Knights of Labor with their master workman, and secretaries, and every other kind of grand high monkey work. I'd just like to meet this fellow Headford, who is as fresh with his general orders, 'shoboes to me has a cowardly sneak, salamed to show his face in Steamville, judging from the way he hides himself in his own town all the time. If I ever get near enough to him I'll tell him what I think of him and his loafing crew, sure as my name is Tom Mansel." At the end of which, or similar remarks, the General Superintendent would stretch himself out to the full length of his seventy-three inches.

It was 2:45 p. m. when the General Superintendent sauntered into his office and took his seat with an air of relief.

Once more No. 11, the fast express carrying the mails for the far West, had been started out of Steamville without any mishap. So far the strikers had interfered with none but freight traffic; but there was no telling when the more reckless of their number might take upon themselves to impede the progress of passenger trains. Therefore the officers always felt better as each succeeding train carrying passengers departed in safety from Steamville, where the strikers were more numerous than at any other point along the line.

The Superintendent had just lighted his cigar when a man entered the office, closing and locking the door behind him. He was a detective in the employ of the railroad company.

"Number 14 has just left, Mr. Mansel. Where is her first stop?"

"She will stop for water at Prairie Flower, fifty-five miles west of here. Why?"

"That train will be wrecked at Running Creek, which is, I understand, ten miles this side of Prairie Flower. I have just learned that a gang of men went down on a hand-car this morning with tools, to loosen all the bolts and fastenings of the inside over the creek. I'm afraid it's too late to prevent a fearful accident."

"But there is a telegraph station two miles this side of the creek," said the Superintendent; "I will send a message and have the operator flag Number 14. There is plenty of time; she is not due to pass that telegraph station until 3:25. It is now just 2:55."

"It is too late, Mr. Mansel. Wait! Listen! receive. "The arrangement was made to cut the wires immediately after the departure of Number 14 from Steamville. But have your operator try what he can do."

The operator was instructed to call at the offices between Steamville and Prairie Flower. In a few moments he reported that he could sounder no response.

"Good God!" exclaimed the excited Superintendent; "there is only one chance to save that train, but I'll take it."

Rushing down to the yard he found the engine which had brought in Number 14 from the east. It was the only locomotive which had steam up, and the fireman was already commencing to rake out his fires.

"Hold on!" shouted the Superintendent to the fireman; "fire up, for God's sake. Do as I tell you—for a life or death—and I'll pay you five hundred dollars in cash tonight!"

To the astonished Superintendent every moment seemed an hour. In six minutes they had on a full head of steam and plenty of coal aboard. Mr. Mansel backed the engine on to the main track. But a crowd of angry strikers had gathered around, and, seeing the chief official of the road with his hand on the throttle, began to think some scheme was afoot to get ahead of them. Few, if any, of their number knowing of the wrecking scheme that having allowed the passenger train to proceed unmolested, they would permit no "extras" to move.

"Great heavens, boys!" shouted the frantic Superintendent, "we must save life. Number 14 will be wrecked if we cannot overtake her. Darn the round-house and smash every stick of property in the yard, if you will, but for God's sake let me go out!"

But the men would not listen. They thought it was a ruse to get a locomotive outside the town limits and move some freight cars from the west yard, two miles away.

They dragged Mansel and the fireman from the cab, while a number of them took possession of the locomotive and prepared to take her back to the round-house. It was useless for the Superintendent to protest or struggle; he had to give way.

But, as he then, in spite the terrible loss of life which was now about to occur, he was a quiet and unassuming man step from the crowd and board the locomotive. As he did so, every other man on the group climbed down, and out ran one of the crowd interfering. As this man started the engine he called to Mansel, "Don't you worry about the wreck until you hear from me."

One hour passed—two hours—three hours. About seven o'clock Mansel came back into Steamville. She was uninjured. All the passengers and all the trainmen were safe. But upon the floor of the baggage-car, covered with a couple of overcoats, lay the dead body of the man who had run off the train.

He had got away from Steamville all right, but in coming through the west yard a dozen different pinch bolts had been emptied into the cab of the locomotive, forced in (we suppose) by the use of many switches in safety. There was no time to stop and explain to the men. Every moment lost meant in so many minutes, so the engineer, bleeding from half a score of bullet holes, kept ahead, and was soon bounding along the track at a terrible speed. Less than a mile from the reeking wreck he sighted Number 14 and headed the train to a standstill. He just had blood and breath enough left to tell the conductor about the scheme for wrecking the train, and with a parting injunction not to blame the Knights of Labor for such an act, and to decently work, he went dead.

General Superintendent Mansel was the first to view the body of the dead man after it was lifted tenderly from the baggage-car. And this was his first meeting with JOHN HEADFOOT, Master Workman (for he was the man, of course, who had run off the train), and he was surprised to find that he was a young man, and a handsome one, with a face that, in spite of the recent disaster, bore no evidence of the brutal character he had formed in his mental picture.

It Is to Be.

In the history of nations, and of men, the works of the fittest seem likely to survive the longest. They may be lost sight of for a little season, but like the flowers of June they come again and prove the right to admiration and renewal.

I ponder over the events in cyclopedia from the wars of Alexander to Grant, from the pyramids of Egypt to the Brooklyn bridge, and noting the drift of sentiment in art, religion and improved improvements, we are forced to conclude that, with all of the crime and suffering of the races on the globe, we know but little after all of the cruelty of war, the lawlessness of passion, or the utter degradation of man in the present as compared with the past.

The past was bloody, revengeful, stupid, cruel, and barbarous in war, reaching to the hand-to-hand contest for kingdoms by poison or by antagonist, while the present consists in battle only as a last extremity, and treats the unvanquished with becoming regard for their humanity. The past gloried in the pleasure and torture to men and women over religious contentions, the present grows more and more tolerant of personal belief. The past aimed at the promotion of rulers, the present would improve mankind. It mattered little in the past that whole nations were subjugated as serfs; to the present the intellect of sages is bent on human doubings between all conditions of life.

That the fittest seem survivors in a material as well as a social sense is shown in a progress of educated nations. English, American, German and France, these are the progressive people of the world in thought and science; the restless invention enjoyable by the masses who govern themselves by new and original methods, and instead of saying with Alexander that we fight them, because two cannot govern the same country, we compete with them proudly and celebrate their advancement in fairs and expositions with rejoicing, because we see in them an element of profit and friendship.

There may be times when political leaders look on the uniformness of neighboring nations with Alexander's greed of conquest, or Cæsar's desire for their gold, but it is not the sentiment of our time to foster such ambition. Men are learning to like each other for selfish reasons if for no other. And this is one of the surest elements of universal progress—a desire to create commerce by friendship. The signs of the times both indicate that the four great Christian nations, with several more lesser ones in influence, would cheerfully unite in a treaty of perpetual peace or an agreement to arbitrate every national difference hereafter.

With this sentiment comes a deep feeling of security, a love of home, and a desire to command commerce by peaceful means. The people of the West are hurrying their grain to far-away markets in islands on foreign shores, while those of the East are taking interest in farm lands and large ranches to bring them into greater production. The people of the North and South are busy in their forges and their foundries and preparing the tools and timber to be used by those who, in ancient times, would have been enemies.

And what does all this argue—for the scroll seems marshling and the marching armies and tortured prisoners and chariots falling from precipice rocks, and martyrs burning at the stake, and kings enjoying the combats of wild beasts in the arena, and robes plotting the destruction of cities, while vast armies, forking adversaries, are met and murdered without trace or mercy, seen rising in the Eastern lands, arts and industries with their peaceful pursuits, and herds of cattle are flying back to meet them from the West—what does it mean, this startling sentiment of men? It means that a union of the good is before us. It means that the implements of modern warfare are to be forged in the friendship of nations, that the war is to be a war of commerce, the battles to be fought with skill and enterprise; that instead of destroying productions we are learning to applaud every means that will increase trade, cheapen good living, supply luxury, and benefit mankind.—*J. Friends of ex-President Arthur are very much disquieted.

It cannot be as not going to die! He is in the hands of a very competent physician. He doctors does not call it Bright's disease. He, it is somewhat disorder that he is suffering from now, and every few hours he takes a gold, and from time to time many other symptoms are developed. These symptoms the public should know are really secondary to Bright's disease.

The physicians say that everything that medical aid can do for him is being done.

This is not so.

The case is a prominent one because the General is an ex-President, and you know how thousands of farmers quietly dying in their farm-houses, of secondary symptoms of Bright's Disease, called by every other conceivable name; thousands of mothers, daughters dying, leaving helpless families; hundreds of thousands in all walks of life who have suffered, and are likewise dying, helpless victims of this cruel, treacherous disease.

Eight years ago a very well known gentleman was about to enter upon large commercial transactions. His personal adviser quietly dropped into his office one day and told him confidential that he was worth to him at times months, and that he ought to settle up his business affairs at once.

That man is alive and well to-day, yet he was given up as incurable by the same disease that is killing General Arthur.

Scholastic.

Speaking of school stories, I want to see school myself once, and one day when visitors were present the teacher thought he would show off the spelling and defining class. Things went on well until the word "singular" was given out. There seemed to be a diversity of opinion as to the meaning of the word, one saying it meant one thing and another another, until the teacher, by the way of throwing light upon the matter, asked:

"Now, if I should say a man was a singular man, what should I mean?" whereupon a bright boy blurted, "A man that didn't have any wife!"

A teacher asked one of her pupils the other day to give her the sum of five and six.

"Leven," was the reply.

"You shouldn't say 'leven,' she said. "Say 'eleven' always. Next boy, how many are five and seven?"

"Twelve!" was the prompt reply.

Now that the country is so prolific in useful gas wells, men's stomachs can be devoted to better purposes than developing their own illuminating gas.—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

An Important Study.

The senate bill providing for the study of the nature of alcoholic drinks and narcotics, and their effects upon the human system, at West Point and Annapolis, in the Indian schools, and in the public schools of the territories and the District of Columbia, has been reported favorably to the house and placed on the calendar. The report accompanying the bill states that nearly 2,000,000 men and women have petitioned the legislatures of the different states for similar laws, and up to the present year the wishes of the people have been complied with in fourteen states. As an evidence that the people earnestly desire a law like the one suggested, the committee points to the fact that petitions bearing the names of 71,276 persons have been presented to this congress asking for its enactment. The effect of similar laws in the different states where they are in force has, in the opinion of the committee, proved most salutary. Such laws lead to progress, and serve to check a threatened evil to humanity and the general welfare. The report argues that the bill invades no right of self government. The measure had the vital merit of touching no political significance, but appealed to the very foundations upon which popular self government rested—the intelligence of the people. It was difficult to see how any objection could be raised to such a statute, except by those who feared to have the next generation educated upon a subject universally recognized to be of the most vital importance to individual health and social security.—Toledo Blade.

What Labor Knows.

Labor knows better than any other element in society the extent of the drink evil. The intelligent working man who looks abroad perceives that all efforts at securing better conditions for his class must fail so long as the class itself, through lack of self control and self denial, renders so large a proportion of its earnings in the saloon, and by the cultivation of depraved tastes kill its own conscience, ambition, self-respect and capacity for improvement. He perceives the futility of talk about the inequality of compensation so long as the fact exists, patent to all the world, that if labor retrenched half its expenditures upon drink a fund would result sufficient to insure comfort and abundance to all its members and to furnish them besides with the means of a higher education and enjoyment. He knows from sad experience that, as a working-man writes to the Voice, "three fourths of the destitution among laborers and their families is the result of intemperance." He knows, too, that the saloon in politics has degraded the voter, corrupted the voter, set the citizen against his own best interests, helped scoundrels to public plunder, excluded honest men from office, stopped the progress of communities, and recruited annually the ranks of the dangerous classes, whose lawlessness, punished or unpunished, is paid for at just out of the wages of the workers.—N. Y. Tribune.

The movement among Knights of Labor to prohibit the use of intoxicants by the members is in the right direction. If successful, it will do much to increase their power and ameliorate their condition. The knightly reasons for the prohibition are that "the man who does not use liquor will be less liable to commit rash and violent acts;" "that his employer will not have his drinking habits as an excuse for getting rid of him, and will listen to his grievances more respectfully if he is a man of sobriety." The Knights also say that "the man who drinks is the slave of his employer."—N. W. Christian Advocate.

The remarkable phase in the practice of Dr. Peter M. Schmidt (frequently called Dr. Peter) is never asked one to describe their diseases. His intuitive perception being so strong he can tell any one their trouble without asking a question. His success is phenomenal. His practice enormous. He is sought after by hundreds wherever he goes, because he never fails, even physician and remedy has failed. The gladness of his patients, called Golden Seal Bitters, which has made his great success, is the world astonished. Ask druggists, they will tell you of the wonderful cures, of the most obstinate diseases, and the wonderful cures are required by physicians, but the pens of faith over wave, "What has been may be again." We say to the sick and discouraged give Golden Seal Bitters a trial. It is all we ask. They will speak for themselves. Sold by Perry Wood and Dr. G. W. Crouter.

A Fragment.

The rosy, dimpled fingers of the spring
Tow embroidery of happy sunshine flits
With myriad millions of new-opening
Blossoms.
But when the autumn from the tassoled hills
Shall tear the rustling showers,
The few pale wafts that may be lingering
Will surely perish in the winter's ills.

The warm, full currents of life's orisons fill
Through youth's springtime, and the hopes
Of manhood's summer, leave no room for Fear;
But when the frost of life's red autumn falls
On Hope's wide field turned sere,
The few that be not mellering side by side
Will wait to sorrow till death kindly calls.

Perhaps each waking of the vernal year
A little larger is than was the last,
Perhaps each following age makes more divine
The vision which the human soul is cast;
If I end, the end doth shine
On earth in vain—unless in all hope or fear,
The future can but increase the past.
—Robert Burns Wilson, in Southern Bivouac for April.

LONDON FASHIONS.

Stern Simplicity the Rule in Walking Dresses—A Novel Style—Helmet-shaped Bonnets.

Some of the new dresses are so sternly simple that only a practiced eye appreciates their costliness and merit; others so gay and beautiful that a child would clasp its hands in delight at the sight of them, as the vision of a fairy queen's robe.

For instance a new model for a walking dress which I saw lately at Miss. Ridly's illustrates the first style to perfection. Its simplicity is something positively extraordinary. It is made of black Indian cashmere, having lines in it of black embroidery. The underskirt is perfectly plain and rather narrow, with the tiniest little plaiting showing under its edge. This underskirt is almost hidden by the tunic, which has an opening right from the waist to the bottom, just a little to the left, about a finger from the front. Near the waist, where the tunic closes, there are two or three small fobs, forming a very slight draping; they look as if the material had been lightly pinched up by a skilful hand and stayed in its place by magic. The bodice has two points at the back, and under the right point one there are a few more of those tiny fobs a little fuller and more numerous. Otherwise the tunic is perfectly plain, and nearly everywhere almost touches the bottom of the underskirt; the bodice is plain, but exquisitely shaped. It is practically impossible to do justice to this dress, which is so profoundly simple, and yet is one of the most beautiful dresses at present confiscated to us.

And now for the contrast. For illustration I will describe a dinner dress, so delicate, so aerial and fine that the very daylight of this dreary climate seems to soil it, and it has to be guarded like a precious jewel until the moment comes for its use. It is not a thing of fairyland, as a child would think, for it is real; but it is as unlike any thing in our actual existence—to a life in which beauty and exquisite delicacy are possible in the world—as it is possible to imagine and an outer world which is never seen. But it is very nice to wear these things, and never think of the brains or care put into them, or how soon their delicate beauty is gone. This dress, stylish of the style I am speaking of, has the front of the skirt made of long pads of cream-colored French lace of exquisite design and Arabesque as butterflies' wings. The lace commences quite narrow at the waist, and there is something like a fan made of the lace, so. On each side is a broad panel of crepe de chine embroidered in a very light fancy. Most lovely is this embroidery material, too more beautiful than itself is the way in which it is shaped to the form. It looks as if it had been smoothed over the hips and had taken the shape; no seam, no fullness is there; yet the shaping is perfect. How this miracle is worked the miracle-worker must know, but I do not. It is like looking at the feats of a clever juggler; one can only say, "Oh, of course there must be some way of doing it—it is not witchcraft" yet it is unmagically like it! The back of the skirt is made of two sets of folds, one of the finest cream lace, one of the rich heavy moire silk, which meet in the middle. These fall away from the waist in the perfect line—the absolutely right curve—without the faintest suggestion of cushion or steel or any such horror. And just at the waist the material is lightly lifted—drawn? it much looks as if it had actually spoken of, as if the artist had just pushed it up a little to lighten the effect and keep it in its place by a spell or a magic word. Stitches are inconceivable in connection with this light, lovely sort of dressing, for it looks as if a puff of soft air would blow it away, as a thistle-down in a bloom. The bottom of the folds of the rich moire silk is fringed, so that it looks almost as if this web was laid down on the airy dress.

Bonnets are made in a sort of helmet shape now, and the bows placed in front rise flame-like from the head. The flowers which are to be so much worn, stand up on a bonnet as though they grew there, and hold their faces up to the sun as they do in the garden. No longer is a flower laid upon a bonnet. The shapes are very small and lie close at the sides; at the back they are calculated for the hair to be worn high on the head. But a new mode of putting on the strings takes away from the baleness at the back to which we have now become almost accustomed. The strings come from right under the ear, right bow in front, and pass, side by side down the back of the crown; then they separate of necessity, and being taken around behind the ear to meet in front, lie smoothly on the upturned hair.—London World.

Good Poker Points.

It is certainly an established fact that poker is now the fashionable American game. It is a crowded favorite for various reasons. The limit among gentlemen is light, the sociability, the rapidity, the possible chances of great improvement in the draw, and the probability of a bold play winning with the weaker hand, all lead a charm and fascination to the game that places it foremost in all the card amusements of gentlemen. In addition, it affords to philosophers and close observers unimportant duties, to free themselves with little worries, to weary themselves with trivial cares. They do not take a large enough view of their sphere, "they thwart their own purposes with unselfless limitations, they lose their economies upon too narrow a foundation.

For example, that is an utterly false notion of thrift which allows it in the slightest degree to endanger health. The mother's health is the home capital, and the moment she suffers it to be overtaxed, she is wastefully drawing upon her principal. Exigencies indeed may occur in which her health must be put in jeopardy,—the illness of husband, or children or parents, or the moral welfare of some member of her family may require that every power be taxed to its utmost, even beyond the limits of personal safety,—but economy never requires a sacrifice like this, but rather forbids it. This is not a mere question of doctor's bills and medicines. Though it never comes to that pass, though the housemother never falls seriously ill, but "manages to keep up," to "drag about her work," she still has defrauded her family of much that money purchased dearly, if at all,—brightness, and merriment, and cheerfulness, the keynote of which must be always struck by the mother; little devices for little comforts, creating nothing, but valuing much and lying only within the mother's power, to subtract these from the daily life of home is to change its character and to lower its tone as essentially as if some great loss of property had rendered necessary a change in the style of living; and to keep those always added to life is only within the mother's power when she is at her best in health and spirits.

A true notion of household thrift therefore involves more than hard work and careful economies. It is indeed hard work that is often most thriftily to be avoided. "The mistress' eye does more work than both her hands," says the old Welsh proverb, and the French have a similar one, "The master's eye fattens the steed." It is the housekeeper's best art to make careful supervision save both time and strength. There is nothing praiseworthy in that "nimbleness" which impels a woman to do more work than her neighbors; there is no economy in doing one's self what can be as well done by a person of inferior capacity. True thrift demands that the higher faculties be devoted to the higher work, and so teach a servant or a child to do a thing thoroughly well, and to see to it that the duty is done, is a more economical way than to do it all one's self.

It is not merely of strength and time that one should be economical. Out of purposes and interest. If the housemother's plan of life is narrower, her purposes falsely centered, her interests frittered away upon trivialities, then her life runs to waste, however saving of odd moments, of odd pence, of old clothing, and of "remainder victuals" she may be. The purpose of a woman's life must reach beyond today, this week, the present season, and embrace the whole future of husband and children, the whole sphere in which she moves. The true economy of life regards duty as a whole, not as a succession of separate acts; it takes the most labor, from the most drudging to the most refined, every recreation, every effort at self-improvement, every hour of social intercourse, every time of anxious care, all work together to perfect that whole, and make the home-life something great, and strange, and beautiful. For the element of beauty must never be wanting, nor sacrificed to that of utility. What quaint old Andrew Fuller has said of so fine and dainty a thing as lace, may apply to many of woman's acts and duties—"Let it not be considered for a superfluous wearing, because it doth neither hide nor heat, seeing it doth adorn, seeming nothing save a little thread decanted on by art and industry." It is quite enough of many actions, as well as of fabrics and furnishings, that they adorn. Beauty makes life so much the richer, and true household thrift will seek for beauty everywhere. Many a homely thing becomes beautiful if but a little "adorned on" by the housemother's deft fingers, but there are things of beauty which cost heavily in time or money, and yet which amply repay the cost. It is the highest province of household thrift to decide upon value like these, learning truly to discern the real, and seeking to secure it, even though easily, and to decline the unreal and reject it, however cheaply it might be obtained.—*Ohio

WESTERN.

The summer season at McVicker's Theater, Chicago, was inaugurated last week by the Madison Square Theater Company, of New York, which gave a most delightful representation of Verplanck's sparkling comedy, "Our Society." The Chicago papers are genuine in their praise of the work of this peerless dramatic organization, which is so perfect as to defy criticism. The Newsays: "It is a pleasant and entertaining thing to watch the workings of an intricate yet perfect piece of mechanism—conceived by an ingenious brain, and put together and guided by a skillful hand. One knows that each wheel fits perfectly into its neighbor, and that there is not in the entire machine a cog or screw or bolt that does not have its due effect upon the working of the whole. Some such feeling of confidence must take possession of those who listen to the performances of the company from the Madison Square Theater now playing at McVicker's." The season of this company will continue six weeks longer.

At Oconto, Wis., the Oconto Company's Boiring mill, shingle mill, and a large number of cedar posts were burned; loss $70,000.

Captain Francis Jeffry Dickens, a son of the celebrated English novelist, died suddenly, at Moline, Ill., of paralysis of the heart. His age was 41 years.

Three hotels and a church were wrecked by a cyclone at Cuthbert, Ala. Eight persons were seriously injured in the Germania Hotel, and the proprietor will probably die of his wounds.

At Muscatine, Iowa, fire destroyed the yards and mills of the Muscatine Lumber Company, a saw-mill on Mud Creek, four dwellings on East Hill Bluff, two wagon bridges, and two bridges of the Rock Island Railway, also one on the main line and one on the Wilton line. The loss will be not less than $250,000.

Police Officer Hannan, the eighth victim of the anarchist riots in Chicago on the 4th of May, died at the County Hospital in that city, after a vain effort had been made to save his life by the transfusion of healthy blood into his system.

Estimated improvements to the Duluth harbor, including breakwater, aggregate an outlay of over $2,000,000, are under way.

A scientific expedition from Princeton College will explore the Rocky Mountains in Western Utah and Wyoming.

The semi-centennial anniversary of the admission of Michigan to the Union attracted fifteen thousand citizens of the State to Jackson, where representative men delivered addresses from three stands. A grand barbecue was held in the fair grounds.

A shower of fish several inches in length fell at Wyoming, Ohio, where the children gathered them by the peck that morning.

A great wind storm swept over Galveston, Tex. Part of the city was flooded and much damage is reported.

Robert Robinson, aged 16, of Waksboro, N. C., who was bitten two years ago by a mad dog, has just died of hydrophobia.

Rev. S. W. Birkhead, of Hampton, W. Va., denounced Miss Emma Clark from the pulpit for personal reflections upon his character. The lady and her brother revenged themselves by administering a caning.

WASHINGTON.

President Cleveland has declined with thanks a wedding present for his wife from the Sultan of Turkey.

Secretary Whitney is having compiled a list of merchant marine vessels which in time of need might be called upon for service as auxiliary cruisers or for transport service.

President Cleveland has accepted the Honorary Presidency of the American Exhibition to take place in London in May, 1887. He will open the exhibition from the White House and start the machinery by telegraph.

It is reported that the President and Mrs. Cleveland contemplate a tour of the great lakes, from Buffalo to Chicago, during the summer.

A resident Cleveland found in his receptacle, the other morning, an old man and his wife, who stated that they had walked from Missouri to shake hands with him.

Mrs. Oscar Folsom, Mrs. Cleveland's mother, confirms the report that the President and his wife will make a tour of the great lakes during the summer.

The Cabinet considered the Canadian fisheries troubles at its last meeting, says a Washington dispatch. Advices from Minister Phelps confirm the press reports that the English Government is not altogether satisfied with the course pursued by the Dominion authorities.

The first official reception of President and Mrs. Cleveland was held at the White House on the evening of the 17th inst., being one of the largest ever held at the Executive Mansion. The diplomatic corps, Congressmen, with their wives, officers of the army and navy, and many distinguished persons residing in Washington were present to pay their respects to the President and his bride.

The Secretary of War has detailed Major John M. Bacon to visit the camp of the Minnesota militia, and Captain Gaines Lawson to perform similar duty among the Illinois brigades at Springfield.

POLITICAL.

Republicans of the Third Missouri District nominated Congressman B. W. Perkins.

A. Easton has been nominated for Congress by the Republicans of the Fifteenth Illinois District.

"Massachusetts is on the ragged edge of another Butler craze," says a Boston dispatch. The announcement in a morning paper that he is training for the Governorship caused a decided sensation in Boston. The comments on the streets and at the hotels showed that he was in the movement than Butler's friends are willing to admit. The general impression, however, is that Butler is playing a little game of bluff as a feeler, and if he finds his grip is as strong as formerly he will start it for another candidate. It is believed that he looks favorably upon the proposed candidacy of Judge Abbott. A name, which is being much repeated, is that Butler is ready to back Abbott for Governor by his personal effort on the stump, and has more than ha f a mind to run for Congress himself at the same time, by way of stirring up the case more thoroughly. Butler has a residence in two districts, and may run either in the Seventh or Eighth."

The Vermont Republican State Convention nominated Lieutenant Governor Grosvenor for Governor, and renominated C. W. Porter, the present Secretary of State; W. H. Dubois, the present Treasurer, and E. H. Powell, the present Auditor, by acclamation. The platform indorses a the prohibitory law; the Edmunds bill for the sale of oleomargarine; forfeiture of State and national railroad commissions, and expresses sympathy with Gladstone and Parnell. In referring to the disposal of public offices it says:

Whatever may be the case elsewhere, the course of the national administration in reference to the disposal of federal offices in this State, in remunitting appointments to party hacks, appointing fellows who are notoriously disreputable, offensive partisanships, by active and offensive partisans, and appointing men who have been notoriously unfaithful to public place for salaries-keepers, pot-house politicians, and Democratic strikers, has been a disappointment to the Republicans of this State, and has been a source of great regret and sorrow to the loyal Republicans of this State, and deserves the condemnation of all who are clean, upright, and honestly public spirited.

W. S. Holman has been renominated for Congress in the Fourth Indiana District.

Congressman Hepburn, of the Eighth Iowa District, has been nominated for his fourth term.

THE INDUSTRIAL OUTLOOK.

Within a few weeks past the statement has gained wide currency that the labor movement had proved a complete failure, and accompanying this with the fact that a careful investigation into the result of the movement leads to show that the apparent success is not as small as has been some time. There are great reasons for accepting the following totals of lines striking, full wage for fewer hours work, daily:

Cities.	Striking men.	Reported as of hour.
Chicago	45,000	25,000
New York	40,000	22,000
Philadelphia	30,000	20,000
Milwaukee	7,000
Cincinnati	6,000	4,000
Detroit	5,000
Pittsburgh	4,200	1,400
Baltimore	3,000	3,000
St. Louis	2,000	8,200
Washington	1,500	1,500
Others	13,000	13,000
Total	156,800	137,100

There were, as previously reported, 150,000 who received shorter hours without striking, and 50,000 who struck for and got them. The falling away has evidently been nearly one-third, as the totals from cities reported are now but sixty-eight per cent. of those given in May.

An agent of the Knights of Labor has noticed most of the road implements at St. Joseph, Mo., to refrain from buying two carloads bound for points in the Grand Island Works at South Chicago.

The Brotherhood of Railroad Operatives is become a part of the Knights of Labor.

Before the adjournment of the International Typographical Union, at Pittsburgh, the special committee on the question of the Union joining the Knights of Labor, presented a long report, which was adopted. The report, after complimenting the Knights of Labor for the highest terms, and pledging them support, commends, first, that the Knights of Labor will not attempt to decide the question of control of domestic trades; second, that they will not cover with the shield of the order any man who has been found unworthy or unjust, with the members of the Union as a fellow-craftsman in good standing. The report of the special committee on the use of stereotype plate matter was approved. The report recommends that the executive council endeavor to unionize all Sunday newspaper plates, and that all non-union firms be published; that the local unions be required to interdict no one of plates where a reduction of the working force will ensue; newspapers must be prohibited from using news plates manufactured in non-union offices or else be declared unfair; no subordinate union can take any action regarding the use of plates without the consent of the executive council.

The striking tailors in New York agreed to accept the arbitration terms and to return to work.

Organizers of the Knights of Labor have formed an assembly among the several girls of St. Louis numbering 700 members. It is said that their place of meeting is kept a profound secret.

The cooks and waiters in the large restaurants at San Francisco struck, the other day, compelling the closing of many dining rooms. The posting of certain rules caused the trouble.

In the iron and steel mills at Pittsburgh the men are working overtime, and notwithstanding the resumption of the works, Thursday output this year, compared with last year, shows an excess of 203 tons.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Sporting notes: Irish Pat, Corrigan's famous running horse, was dosed by a jockey of the horse John Sullivan, in order to prevent him from starting in a race at St. Louis. Jack Burke and Pete Nolan fought six hard rounds at Cincinnati, but neither had the best of the fight. John L. Sullivan and Charles Mitchell will fight six eight-round bottle with gloves on the Pole grounds, New York, July 5. John Tenner and Jack Gardner engaged in a sculling race at Pullman, Ill., which resulted in a decisive victory for Gardner. It is claimed that Tenner threw the race.

The city of Vancouver, British Columbia, was wiped out by fire on the 13th.

The Supreme Lodge of the Ancient Order of United Workmen was in session at Minneapolis, Minn., last week. Thirty-one States and Territories were represented. The annual report of the Supreme Master Workman showed the receipts for 1885 to be $831,900; disbursements, $825,349; relief fund receipts, $65,241; disbursements, $64,509; total number of deaths, 1,284; total benefit assessments, $2,583,468; losses paid, $2,566,458.

A dozen lives were lost by the recent terrible fire at Vancouver, B. C. The loss will exceed $1,000,000, upon which there is practically no insurance. Nearly 300 houses were burned. Hundreds of people are camped out. There are meager facilities for the relief of the sufferers. Most of the burned frame buildings will be replaced with brick structures. Contracts for a large hotel and other extensive buildings were awarded and work was let out before the fire. A dispatch from New Westminster, B. C., gives the following particulars of the disaster:

Between 2 and 3 o'clock the branch fires reached the business portion of the city, and from that time the flood buildings to go was Macarthur's drug store, Ross & Co.'s, Hastings, Cor. Cambie and Ross. The flames sped up to Carrall street with astonishing rapidity, and almost before the people knew it the whole of the western portion of the city was in a blaze. The scene then became terrible. Men, women and children were obliged to fly almost for life, leaving behind them their effects to save their lives. In some instances they could not even stop to place them on impovirished carts, which were hurried to the waterside, and many of the poor people who had managed to get their goods as far as the waterside had to leave their effects in charge MSS Company's wharf, but the majority had to leave them on the wharves, where they were soon from either of these points lost in turn, and left to the city, which, in the hurry and confusion of the city, burning, fragments could be seen occasionally floating down the streets, and in the hands of the people, and with several other articles concealed in the sewers, which work clearing up the debris for the railroad company, which has already been in operation, and it is hoped to be in operation in a small way, at least, by next week on the pioneer circuit of the new city.

The American Association of Nurserymen and kindred interests held its eleventh annual convention at Washington, D. C.

A convention of Knights Templar ministeries held an eight-days' session in Chicago.

FOREIGN.

It has been definitively settled that the dissolution of Parliament will take place on the 24. Write for the new election will be proclaimed immediately, and will be made at prompt nominee on the day after receipt of writs. The elections should be finished by the end of July, and the new Parliament should be ready to assemble by August. If Parliament is to be thus dissolved, Mr. Gladstone will resign, and Lord Salisbury will then be summoned by the Queen to form a new Cabinet. A list of the new Cabinet Mr. Gladstone in his own Midlothian district, because he believes it will require all his energies in that district. There will probably be some changes in the Parliamentary programme, several measures having made known their intention not to work production. There is no intention, however, of any weakening in the party discipline. Mr. Gladstone issued an address to the Midlothian electors, sending a strong appeal for support in the coming contest and alluding to a few minor blunders of the paper much now existing, and which the Tories seek to continue.

The Comte de Paris will go to England The compelled Orleans Prince will remain in France.

Boitean, the French author, is dead.

Ludwig, the deposed insane King of Bavaria, committed suicide by drowning himself in a shallow lake. The Bavarian Ministry has lost his life trying to save the distressed monarch. The author has been proclaimed King under the title of Otto I., but as he has been mentally unsound for ten years, his nephew Prince Leopold will probably be Regent.

The story comes from Persia that a brother-in-law of the Shah refuses to deliver to Minister Winston the money for the Persian road contract until an installment of $30,000 is paid from the Lazarus Brothers, putting the job through without noise or friction.

The former physician of King Ludwig declares that the deceased monarch was not insane. A Vienna correspondent hints that the trials as to the King's condition and death will never be known. The reports were sent to Munich under escort of cavalry.

Louis Laurent Simonin, the French engineer and traveler, is dead.

A dispatch from Paris states that there have been fresh massacres of Christians in Annam.

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

The ten-mile bicycle race for the world's championship, at Lynn, Mass., was won by John R. Prince in thirty minutes eight and 3-fifths seconds, Nelson second, and Dunlap third.

Workmen employed by Peter Hendricks in digging a reservoir at Bloomington, Pa., discovered an earthen pot filled with coin, believed to amount to several thousand dollars. The finder, the contractor, and the former owner of the land are preparing for a triangular suit over the treasure.

A secret circular of General Master Workman Powderly has been published in Philadelphia, June 12, and the Knights of Labor are warned against what is considered a plot to pack the Knights' convention, to be held in the month of October, with politicians. Mr. Powderly claims to have discovered a movement on foot to disrupt the order by wholesale means.

The Greenback-Labor party of Ohio, in State convention at Mansfield, nominated a full ticket headed by Jacob Dolson Cox, for Secretary of State. A ratification meeting held in the evening was addressed by Hon. Jesse Harper, of Illinois, and others.

The Ohio Supreme Court has decided that the action of the State Senate in seating Democrats in place of their seats are perfectly legal.

When Mr. Gladstone started from London on his Scotch campaign, fully 10,000 people gathered at the depot to give him godspeed, and when the Premier drove up in his carriage they made frantic efforts to get through the police and the barriers which had been provided to keep them back. A great many men and boys climbed to the top of the railway carriages standing in the station, and from that elevation cheered Mr. Gladstone as he passed them. Mr. Gladstone only reached his coach with the greatest difficulty. A squad of policemen surrounded him and by much elbowing succeeded at last in getting him through the closing gateways to the car. The coach window at Mr. Gladstone's seat was open. The crowd, catching sight of the venerable minister through it, cheered vociferously, and the Premier, rising and speaking from the window, said:

Gentlemen—I have been made and will be made to direct your attention from the coal question at home. The question is solely whether Ireland shall be trusted to manage her own affairs. There is no doubt that the right which that Dominion and other British colonies enjoy of managing their own affairs has been found in Ireland and generally because we have adopted the policy of the Government of Canada. The treasury and the federal government are safe.

At all the stations along the route the Premier was enthusiastically greeted by enormous crowds, and in Edinburgh after he had gone, filled the streets and wildly cheered the Premier.

The French Senate Committee has reported by a vote of 8 to 3 all proposals for the expulsion of the princes.

A large number of bills were passed in the Senate on June 17, among them being measures to construct roads to the national cemeteries at Chickamauga and Chattanooga; to grant the use of the city of San Francisco for the Pacific Coast Industrial Exposition; to grant the use of the city of Los Angeles, for the Southern California Industrial Exposition; to grant the use of the city of Los Angeles, for the Southern California Industrial Exposition; to grant the use of the city of San Diego, for the Southern California Industrial Exposition; to grant the use of the city of Sacramento, for the Pacific Coast

Congressmen Who Object.

Mr. Holman has not figured so prominently as an objector in this Congress, writes a Washington correspondent of the New York Mail and Express. Several, both in this and the forty-eighth Congress, tried to follow his example and gain a similar reputation, but none have succeeded in putting the fine touch upon it that he did. He has exercised a power of nice discrimination, which has prevented his becoming universally hated, as several who have tried to follow in his footsteps without appreciating his motives. Though he has been the cause of many disappointments, and has called forth momentary resentment, he has the entire respect of the house, and is never accused of captiousness. His was an original crusade upon jobs, and he cultivated a new field of fame, which none of his imitators have been able to cultivate. In fact, these imitators have brought "objecting" into disrepute, and that, probably, is the reason he cares less to occupy that position. He has probably not made more objections this session than any other member. As an expert, he is probably disgusted at the failures. An objection from him seldom provoked resentment. He had a genius for the role he undertook. He objected to the passage of a measure when he knew it was improper, or thought it likely to be. Prove to him that it is all right and he does not oppose a bill.

Members have a habit of retaliating upon each other in this matter, and generally a member who is about to ask a favor of the house is careful not to interpose an objection to a similar request by another. Mr. Holman apparently has never been influenced by this consideration, and has seldom been retaliated upon. He has frequently been known to check a bill by his objection and immediately afterward to ask and obtain unanimous consent to take up some measure in which he was interested.

Mr. Weller, in the last house, who was envious of the great objector's fame, succeeded in getting the gavel-bade house down on him by objecting indiscriminately. Members chafed so under this persecution that they were thankful when he was not returned.

But Mr. Beach, of New York, who began to show some of these traits last session, stepped right into his place in this congress, and poses as the universal objector. He will object to any and everything, of a private or local character, where his one voice will have any effect. He occupies the first front seat on the Democratic side, right in front of the speaker's desk, and in the line of his eye, and enters his objection when he hears unanimous consent asked, frequently without raising his head. He always smiles immediately afterward and looks satisfied, which makes the disappointed members mad. Sometimes some of the stern old members who are in the habit of having the house respect their requests, will stand and look straight at him for many minutes, with a bitter, cutting sort of a glare, after an occurrence of this sort. He doesn't seem to mind it. It is probable that no request by Mr. Beach for unanimous consent would now be granted, as too many members are waiting for a chance for retaliation, and the resolution which was introduced by Mr. Weaver the other day, and ruled out on account of its disrespectful wording, is said to have had reference to him in the preamble. Mr. Holman is a very modest man, given very much to blushing, and these things have driven him from the field. He devotes much more time to committee work this session, and is not watching the house proceedings so closely.

Readers Never Skip a Line.

The President and wife have settled down to be old married folks, but we may expect for some time yet to be told that they take breakfast in the morning, that the bride appears "charmingly attired," and that the president wears his Prince Albert coat buttoned, with an occasional variation by being informed of removals from among the household servants for "offensive partisanship," and making new appointments without consulting our congressional delegation. Newspaper readers think the publicity given to movements of the bride and groom have been scandalous, but they never skip a line in reading the report, not a mother's son or daughter of them.

The People Like the President's Marriage.

The country newspapers afford a pretty accurate gauge of the feelings which the great average of plain people entertain with regard to any matter of current public interest, and it is interesting to see how they look at the marriage of the President. "The ceremony in the White House was as simple as those usually taking place in our country and village homes," says a Vermont Republican weekly, and the remark is purely a representative one.—Springfield Republican.

It was lucky for Frank Ambrose, head miller in the Pueblo flouring mills, that he was a man of muscle. His coat caught in some machinery gearing and he was on the point of being drawn to his death when he caught a beam and clung to it while he was stripped of coat, vest, and undergarments. His watch was ground to powder, and he himself was badly bruised.

It is reported that the Boyne river was never so generous in giving up her speckled beauties as this year. It is a very common occurrence for local sports to bring in from 60 to 72 of the finny tribe in a few hours of an afternoon's sojourn along her banks, some of which have weighed 1½ pounds.

Our esteemed contemporary having advertised with a good deal of apparent satisfaction 6,000 impressions of job work in one week, we would state for those interested that the JOURNAL job press printed 4,625 impressions of work last Friday afternoon and Saturday, in lots of 500 and less, and it don't run by steam, either.

Our deal with the Dr. Bonanko Medicine Co., whose locals have been running in the JOURNAL during the past year, have been very pleasant. Promptly on the last day of each quarter they have remitted a New York draft for the amount due. A firm which deals in this manner must certainly have good goods to back them up.

Mrs. Sullivan, of Beaver Island, had quite an experience for her a few days ago. She is 62 years of age, and has just taken her first ride on the cars. Her enjoyment of her car journey was somewhat marred by the constant fear she experienced that the cars would blow up and kill her.—Herald.

The postoffice will be removed about July 1st next to a new building being erected for the purpose on Main street, north of its present site.

The Northern Michigan Line of steamers, consisting of the propellers Lawrence and Champlain, has been transferred by the Seymours to P. J. Klein, of Milwaukee, and Edward Burke, who has been acting as engineer of the Lawrence. The line will be maintained and the boats operated as usual. The purchased price has not been made known as yet. The Champlain and Lawrence were formerly a part of Chamberlain's old Northern Transit Line, which ran between Chicago and Ogdensburg. It was founded when the Welland Canal was a small but important waterway, and boats had to be constructed after certain plans in order to navigate it successfully. Chamberlain led upon a model for his vessels which was superior to anything ever built. They were excellent carriers, good sea boats, and had a prestige which no other line ever achieved on the lakes. But the new Welland ended its fate, and it went to pieces.—Cheboygan Democrat.

The Great German Doctor.

The remarkable phase in the practice of Dr. Peter W. Schmidt (frequently called Dr. Peter), he never asked one to describe their disease, his intuitive perceptions being so strong he can tell any one what ailed them, without asking them. His success is phenomenal. His remedies are as wonderful as his diagnosis. He is sought after by the sick and afflicted wherever he goes, because he cures, when many physicians and remedy has failed. The giving of his name to his popular Golden Seal Bitters, which has made its great success to the world marks a new era in medicine. Golden Seal Bitters, and Schmidt's Blood Mixture, cure the most obstinate of disease, and its wonderful cures are marvelous and phenomenal, but the cures of Salt Rheum—"What has been may be again." We say to the sick and afflicted, try Golden Seal Bitters a trial. It is all we ask. They will speak for themselves. Sold by Perry Weed and Dr. G. W. Crouter.

BUTTER AND EGGS WANTED

THE KEEPSAKE KISS.

BY NATHAN D. URBER.

Pare thee well, and fare thee sweetly!
And, alone we must shortly sever,
Name soon keepsake that shall nestly
Symbolize our love forever.
Give me a kiss to take away
Which, my lass-love, shall it be?
"Ah!" she murmurs, "that were cruel,
Then would be unworthy thee."

Name it, then, before we sunder—
Gift that we will fade or perish,
Is there naught on earth or under
That for love of me would'st cherish?
"Naught I have, love, naught I crave
When my face is far away!
Yes!" and the uplifted finger
Bids me listen to her say:

"Give me but one sacred kiss, love,
And while on my lips it hovers
Breathe a silent vow by this, love,
That we will be true the round earth covers
To be true to thee forever!
What by this betoken may?
So, with love inclose and human,
Still my heart shall beat for thee."

Angel! or mortals to offer,
For a gift so poor and simple,
Pledge so rich, say and shall profffer
Mouth, if not heart, now, or charmed lips
Can but breathe the vow of fidelity?
Love, faith, hope, and truth—stars—
If thy heart but feel intensely
To the words that lips and horn.

Take, then, with this kiss that settles
On thy lips' imperial blossom,
What I pledge between the petals
To thy pure and saintly bosom—
Love, faith, hope, and truth—
Never from thy fond heart to stray!
Pare thee well, and fare thee sweetly!
Now, my love, I must away.

THE COLONEL'S STORY.

BY CAPTAIN JAMES MONTFORD.

"No dog was at the threshold, great or small;
No person in the hall or household circulate,
No cat demurely dozing on the wall,
Nor the domestic tortoise.

"The centipede along the threshold crept,
The cobweb hung across its intact bugle,
And in its winding sheet the maggot slept,
At every nook and angle."
—Hood.

"The person who passed through the war without meeting adventures which thrilled his blood, or mysteries which chilled it, must have been a very queer individual."

"We all met with adventures enough, Colonel," I replied; "but they flitted past so vaguely that very little is remembered by the great majority. What was noticed has now become historical. Every table-grouse beneath the weight of that great mess."

"Umph!" said he, sitting down in his chair. "But what is to become of the mass of events which the historians of to-day would swear at, eh?"

"That need furnish entertainment for those who will listen. But I see you have a story; I'm not one of the sneerers, I promise you."

"Well," said the old gentleman, laughingly, "the tale will diminish in the telling, but I will relate it plainly."

"There was an old ruined house upon the plantation of a gentleman named Murray, in Tennessee, which had gained a celebrity for being the harboring place of the spirit of a giant soldier, who was said to have fallen under disgraceful circumstances during the War of Independence.

"The gentleman who owned the place at the date I am speaking of disclaimed all knowledge of the ghastly warrior, and, indeed, seemed the less altogether.

"The house, which I shall attempt to describe after a moment, had been erected by the dampness of its situation; for it had been built in a hollow, but little above the level of the lake, which was about a mile distant.

"It extended back for a considerable distance, but had, in the daytime at least, nothing romantic in its appearance.

"I often wished to pay a visit to the inside, but leisure was wanting for a long time.

"But one afternoon, shortly before sundown, I was returning to my barracks by the road which ran by the house, when one of those sudden thunder-storms so common in the country arose.

"I was entirely unprovided for it, and as the huge drops pattered upon my head, while the play of lightning overhead was startling from its intensity, I forced my horse through the thin hedge that fenced the premises.

"The house now bore a different aspect. The bright flashes of lightning seemed to turn their way through the walls for an instant, only to be followed by gloom still more terrible.

"I felt a tremor of fear as I dragged the unwilling steed through the broken white, and I was not made more comfortable by the groaning of timbers, and falling wood inside.

"Leading the horse into one corner, where he would be protected by the wall from the full force of the storm, I crossed down at his side.

"The storm which followed was terrible; the rain fell in sheets, the thunder was almost deafening, and the wind seemed determined to tear the crazy-concealing walls from their foundations.

"My horse was a young animal, and had become very excitable. I found myself liable to be crushed by him at any moment, and was at last forced to leave the shelter of his body crouched, and peep away through the darkness to some further cover in the building, out of the reach of his heels.

"The floor was full of pitfalls; but, taking a quick glance at my surroundings in the momentary flashes of lightning, I caught the opposite side of the building, of the upper floor which still remained would shield me from the storm.

"Suddenly there was a blaze of flame, and for a second I was dazzled.

"It came just in time, however, for in front of me, and yawning between feet, was a large ragged hole in the floor underfoot.

"I at the same instant caught a glimpse of a tall figure not more than three feet distant.

"Its features became so impressed upon my mind in that instantaneous glance that, had I known him for years, the knowledge would have added nothing to his description.

"A very tall man, with a dark face, exceedingly handsome, but with wild-looking eyes, that emitted the blood in my veins, as I shrank with apprehension, and yet a scarcely human cry, the specter, as in that fearful moment I thought it to be, leaped across the chasm and seized me by the throat.

"I struggled with the desperation of madness to release myself; but, whatever his appearance might be, his grasp was formed of steel.

"He forced me backward toward the hole; but the instant I was falling the floor gave way, and we fell downward into the gloomy cellar beneath.

"The storm did not continue long," said the Colonel, after a short silence, "and the moon came out very clear, and found my horse found his way out of the building and to his quarters.

"When I awoke from my faint I found half a dozen of the boys bending over me.

"I lay upon the lock in a pool of water in the cellar of Gaston's house.

"I related my story before I was well out of the place, and from the ill-boding grins with which it was heard I realized that my veracity was suspected. I never related my difficulties of the night afterward.

"It is my opinion that the Gaston was some adherent of the Southern cause, who was ready to shoot down the same men as myself.

"A day or two, it added another legend to the house of Gaston."

THE BATTLE OF SHILOH.

Reunions of army organizations call to mind old associations, and thrill me often with recollections of my experiences during the war. A new subject came into the popular impression exists that at Shiloh the entire army was surprised, and fled in the force part of the day, and that no part of that grand army behaved well. I expected two hours.

"Such, at least, from my standpoint, in common with a part of my brigade, members of the 25th Illinois, 15th Illinois, 15th Illinois, and the Fifty-fourth Ohio; we saw matters in a very different light, and as an historian or General has done no justice for what we did on April 6, I deem it my duty to correct the impression, and let the world know what a mere skirmish has accomplished without concerns or artillery.

"Our camp was amid a peach orchard in blossom. We had been there some three weeks, doing fancy hand-box duty. As a few scows or leaves accumulated, in camp a detail was made to clear it. Houses we had made no preparation, for the reception of the enemy. Although the flower of the rebel army by some twenty miles away, in command of one of their abbot generals, we had no pickets out.

"It was quite early on that memorable lovely morning of April 6, 1862, that heavy cannonading was heard far down to the right from our camp. It increased rapidly and seemed to near us. My brigade consisted of the Seventy-first Ohio on the right, the Fifty-fifth Illinois in the center, and the Fifty-fourth Ohio on the left, and was in Stuart's brigade of Sherman's division. When we took our places at the front our brigade was isolated from the rest of the division, and sent to the extreme left flank to guard a ford on Lick Creek. The remainder of the division was sent to the right. Our position was on the nearest ridge, a little over on the north side. Every part commanded the ford. The creek ran in a northwesterly direction from the Tennessee, and our line was nearly parallel with that river for some miles. A bridge of rocks on the south side rendered it impossible for an army in column to cross except at this ford.

"It was 8 a. m. we could begin to hear musketry, and we were all in line, eager for the fray. A 10 a. m. we were saluted by a twelve-pound battery, on the bluff we occupied mother earth, but they threw the shot into the tree-tops. Very soon a little past 10 a. m., General Chalmers, at the head of his brigade, passed at the ford and did not attempt to cross, but moved down the creek until the center of his command rested on our left flank, and concentrated his fire upon our line. We had to been built in a hollow, but little above the level of the lake, which was about a mile distant.

—Boston Courier.

ONE of the most characteristic stories in Sir Lyon's autobiography is told about Mr. W. E. Forster, who was in his whist-playing. Mr. Payn, the novelist, is an enthusiastic whist player, while Mr. Forster only "joined in" when some one was wanted to make up a rubber. On one occasion they were partners, and Mr. Forster was playing especially. For a time Mr. Payn kept his temper, as in the circumstances such others had done, but at last he broke down and looked thoroughly miserable. His partner saw what was wrong, and came to Mr. Payn's rescue. "Say anything you like," he said, "only don't say a word to which you can, call me Buckshot!"—St. James' Gazette.

INCONSTANCY.

This soft, lamentant, pleading rain
Does scarcely cease to weep
There's grief altogether
The sky is weeping for its sake;
The sun is hidden behind it
And that in April weather.

With such a cloud of weeping tears,
A young, remorseful maiden frown
Her pretty dimples pout her lips
But soon the chastly weather clears,
She smiles again—who knows why?
A richest sun to-morrow.
—Somerville Journal.

SOME papers are criticising the President because in a recent message he used the phrases "innumerous thousands" and "unprecedented." But Mr. Cleveland wants to turn clear back to the final part of the dictionary and take out a pair of smooth words it isn't any one's business. There is no proof that he ever got any of the book in hunting them up; dentistes he has studied it all the way through till he knows the most of it by heart, and plays it on the piano. Now that I know how the thing is done I am surprised only at its simplicity.

In the first place, Foster has to accustom his visitor's name. This he did by a simple device. When Mr. Smith sat at the only table in the room he was unaware that beneath the writing pad was what is called "carbon paper," an oiled and blackened sheet, which, when placed beneath the paper use is written, transfers the impression to another piece of paper beneath it. The kind of paper is used in making duplicate copies in type writing. Hard pencil was placed where Mr. Smith would pick it up, and in order to write his name he unconsciously bore down upon the copying paper. The attendant expertly withdrew the copy and carried it to his employer. Now to the attendant the thing is easy.

Bare your arm to the elbow. In the right hand hold a thin piece of paper but with a slightly rounded edge that will not cut. As you probably do not possess such an instrument take a piece of a very stiff visiting or business card, and be bring its edge rather hard upon the under portion of your arm, follow the outlines of any letters you choose. The result will be barely discernible white lines that soon pass away. Five minutes later, with your hand on a crumpled piece of paper, rub hard upon that your arm as vigorously as you can, and you will be surprised when you see the letters you trained and disciplined appearing beneath the skin in the full vividness of your own handwriting. Now you see that Foster did. He marked the name "John Smith" on his arm, drew down his shirt sleeve, put on his coat, and walked into the reception room. His rubbing the envelope over the arm was simply intended to delude John Smith with the belief that his name was conveyed from the inclosed paper to Foster's blood. Simple, isn't it? Yet it is far more complex than most of the mediumistic tricks. There are endless varieties of the deception.

HOW STRANGE it is that ideas in various parts of the globe are so contradictory! For instance, take the question of girls. In spite of our advancing ideas we have a general conviction that when a man is in love he is not to very hard work. We shield them if we can. In Asia and Africa, on the contrary, in spite of all we are always hearing of lazy lives of women in those countries, the belief prevails that they were born to labor. The same is true in many parts of Germany. In Turkestan and on the Tartar steppes the Kirghese sultanas and their daughters, in whose veins flows the blood of long lines of kings, still milk the sheep, cows, and goats, and perform the menial duties of the household. They reverse the order of things. The mother wears silk and the daughter calico; the mother cultivates accomplishments and the daughter does the drudgery; in fact, they really consider the mother entitled to the best of everything! Such is it to be uncivilized. There the mother is at home in the drawing-room and the daughter in the kitchen, and we would look in vain for the fashionable and well-educated girl to scorn her mother. What a blessed state of affairs!

AN OPIUM EATER'S STORY.

Crawling Over Red-Hot Bars of Iron In His Fearful Frenzy—A Scientific Investigation—Relief Found.

Continental Times-Star.

"Do you believe in ghosts?"

The brief sentence was fairly hissed into the ear of a prominent druggist on Vine street by a person who, a few years ago well off, is now a burglar-worn wreck.

One can scarcely realize the sufferings of an opium victim, if he should attempt to depict it. But who can fully describe the joy of the poor wretch when he finds a cure?

H. H. Wilson, of Loveland, O., formerly of Mt. Martin, Harrison Co., Ohio, merchant, formerly of St. Louis, and of the well-known firm of H. C. Wilson & Co., clothiers, formerly of the city, gave our reporter yesterday a lengthy account of his experience with the "Fiend" which crowd over red-hot bars of iron and coils of fire," he said, "in my agony during an opium frenzy. The very thought of my sufferings freezes my blood and chills my bones. I was then weighing over 200 grains of opium daily.

"How did you contract the habit?"

"Excessive business cares broke me down and my doctor prescribed opium. That is the way nine-tenths of cases commence. When I found I was hopelessly enslaved I tried to end my life.

"Do you mean to say, Mr. Wilson, that you actually attempted suicide?"

"Indeed I have."

"Do you object to telling us how?"

"No, not. Sometimes I would take several opium eating physicians, we became satisfied that the appetite for opium was based in the kidneys and liver. Our next object was to find a specific for restoring those organs to health. The physicians, moved against their code, advised their attention to a certain remedy, and because thoroughly convinced on its scientific merits alone that it was the thing we had found in refined opium in every case of disordered kidneys and liver. I began using it, and, soon, commencing to sweat with my own special remedy, I found that I was cured. I can say that the most important part of the treatment is to get those organs freed into good working condition, for in them the opium is organized and is sustained, and in their over-taxed condition it is given time to the stomach, liver, and bowels, and enriches the blood, and the system is built up, and, in fact, it is a well-arranged three-cornered fortifying the system against malaria. I have tried it on every of the gifts for convalescents, digestion the infirmities of age, and helps the constitution wonderfully."

A Southern Cure for Spring Fever.

Just go an' git you a han'ful of dogwood, an' a han'ful of ivy, and a han'ful of poplar bark. Then git you a little grain'ar grayleaved root, and burn nine red corncobs—be shure and get red corncobs—an' save the ashes, an' heat all them barks an' roots an' ashes up in water. Then go to the blacksmith-shop and git a han'ful of clean cinders, an' git a little piece of brimstone, an' a little piece o' sulphur, an' a little piece o' saltpeter, an' heat them all up fine. Then mix them up together, an' take a teaspoonful three times a day for nine days, an' then nine more days, an' then begin again an' take it nine days; an' do this three times. By that time you'll have it all tied up, an' you'll be as fat as a hog.—Georgia Farmer, in Atlanta Constitution.

Dune in Milwaukee.

"You can't get it-bleed out of a turtle," said the starving Nebraska emigrant, as he landed a beer mug on the head of a defunct tramp, "but I bet I can. I'd swan out of a bleed-t;" and then he grabbed the offender by the throat.

"You hadn't ought to do that way," gasped the sufferer; "lettuce part friends."

"Friends—nothing," yelled the barmaid; "I can't stand yo-your co-alblaging. You ought to be ashamed, an' make me re-mehanchly. D-don't you scome is here a-g-gain."

"Oh, how you've made my spine ache!" whined the tramp, as he went out into the cold and pitiless world.—Peck's Sun.

THE propriety and good taste of dividing away with abbreviated names among women is fast growing in favor, and the good old fashion of giving the full name is regarded as the correct and dignified thing. Mollie, and Mattie, and Tillie, and Maggie are again Mary, Martha, Matilda, and Margaret—stately names all of them, and full of significance, whereas their diminutives are silly and meaningless; and women are gradually awakening to the fact that it is far more elegant to reserve these pet names, if they be used at all, for the household, and to sign themselves always in addressing those outside this little circle with the full name they received at the baptismal font. In this respect our ancestors seem to have been much more sensible, and it would be well now if the old form of addressing women as Mistress Ann Hage, Mistress Betsy Jones, etc., were revived. The present custom of relaxing the manlier name at a middle name after marr age, and the use of the husband's Christian name by widows, are both sensible, as they identify the individual with a certain family.

The March of Prohibition.

The cause of prohibition is marching on so rapidly that a few months seems to have changed the political atmosphere with an interest and importance that challenges our intelligence to account for the remarkable development.

Everybody seems proud of being associated with the prohibition movement, and this is creditable to the intelligence and common sense of the community, and is mostly due to a wide dissemination of the facts and arguments that have awakened conscientious convictions and Christian sentiment, all of which has opened a flood of light on the enormity of the evils that flow from this terrible curse of rum-selling. The people are fast coming to see that votes ought to represent conscience, and that our emisciences do not find their incarnation in either of the old parties. And as the rum-seller cares only for votes and political indorsement of the legality of his business, the people can only secure their freedom from the curse of the liquor traffic through political methods, which means through a political party committed to prohibition first, last, and always.

Moral Heroism.

The idea of "throwing away votes" at the very time your cause is numerically the weakest is the very time that your individual votes count the most. The party that triumphs by securing votes cast for it by voters who considered it a "choice of evils," will fail in degree, as individuals must fall who temporarily succeed by false pretenses. The voter who votes against his principles, upon considerations of expediency, involves a force for evil which is sure to return sooner or later, and torture his soul for time and eternity. Prohibition would bring more general prosperity and individual happiness than the success of any or all of the great political or moral questions of the day. The state, the home, the general government, commerce, trade, education—everything would be more secure and prosperous. Let us work, vote and pray for prohibition.—From Demorest's Monthly for July.

Forty citizens from Texas recently on a pleasure excursion proved to be all prohibitionists and only three smokers among them. No wonder the Lone Star state is "booming for temperance."

Washington telegram: Speaker Carlisle does not appear at all cast down by the fate of the tariff bill. He is credited with saying: "Since a majority of the House were unwilling to do that it is better the motion to consider it should have been defeated rather than to have got it before the House and clogged its best hour of by striking out the amendment clause. Under present circumstances I will remain on the calendar, where I can be taken up at any time the House chooses. The expulsion of the French princes by the republic has caused much excitement in Paris. A cable dispatch from that city says:

"It is feared that serious trouble may result from the bitter feeling engendered. The better class of people are in a state of mind bordering on despair, against the issues of these arbitrary political and imperial measures. They regard the step as an evidence of weakness on the part of the Government, and dread the effect of it on the minds of the people, who are prepared to accept the decree of revolution. They look, too, with fear upon the action of the Senate, which has proved itself a tool in the republican position, will tend to make the Conservatives and imperial parties in a measure hostile to the republic, and has ever arrayed a keen sympathy for the exiled princes. The Senate and Chamber of Deputies are now in a state of disorganization because of the recent decree, and it is feared that the Senate will be unable to make a quorum, and that the Chamber will be left to the mercy of the Radicals, who are the most dangerous element in the country. The Senate is composed of men of ripe years, who have seen much of the world, and have had experience in the affairs of the nation, as well as in the affairs of the world, and are known to be the most conservative men in the legislature with other countries. This also has the effect of exercising a restraint on the representatives of France at foreign courts, in Washington, London, Vienna, and Rome. In fact, all the best class of these who hold offices in France are in a state of uncertainty as to their position, and should a national crisis come, the leader of the line de Chambord did regiment of men would be found ready to rally to the standard of the king."

A campaign fund of $1,000 was raised, of which Mr. Austin gave $400.

The bill repealing the preemption and timber-culture laws passed the Senate, on June 23, by a vote of 34 yeas to 20 nays. The Senate passed the bill providing for the appointment and compensation of a United States District Judge for the Southern District of Alabama, with a slight amendment offered by Senator Ingalls, which fixes the salaries of all United States District Judges at $3,500 per annum. Senator Ingalls explained the part of Federal Judges, and the President himself, who had been appointed under Republican administrations, and have opened pension bills. The House would hardly consider the Senate amendment, and it will, adopted, by a vote of 90 to 78, an amendment to the effect that the salaries of Judges appointed by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals and Federal Judges shall be used in printing, binding, and distributing the decisions and orders of said Circuit Court of Appeals.

Brief Summary of the Proceedings of Congress.

An extradition treaty with Japan was ratified by the Senate June 21, as also one for the survey of the boundary line between the United States and Mexico. The Senate passed a bill granting Humboldt Park, in Chicago, to the Public Library, Soldiers' Home, and Army Home, in Washington. In the House of Representatives, Mr. Dingley introduced a Republican silver bill. Mr. Hiscock introduced a joint resolution for the adjustment of the Pacific Railroad Company's indebtedness, including collateral trust bonds, guaranteeing the principal and interest without the interest of the Government. The postal appropriation bill passed the House, with the provision that the Postmaster-General may pay the salaries of those who have been appointed under the Republican administration, and who have opened pension bills; the Senate will not agree to this provision, and Postmaster-General Vilas will be obliged to pay the salaries of those who have opened pension bills, or else see the pension business of his office go to pieces. The Senate Committee on Pensions will hold a meeting to-day (June 24) to consider the pension bills, and will report to the Senate the Commissioner of Pensions, who will be asked to give his opinion as to the advisability of passing the bill by parts, or in the form in which it was passed by the House

THE CHAMPION VETOIST.

A Washington dispatch, dated June 25th, says that President Cleveland is now the champion vetoist of his country. Not only has he made a larger number of vetoes in a given length of time than any other president, but he has actually made more vetoes in the 15 months he has been in office than any other president ever made in the entire term; yes, even more than any other president ever made in an eight years' stay in that office. The number of vetoes furnished by Mr. Cleveland up to this time is 74. This is more than by any other president even in an eight years' term. President Johnson was supposed to be the boss vetoist in his time, but he only made seventeen vetoes in almost four years' service, against more than double that number by Mr. Cleveland in a little over a year. President Grant made twenty-eight vetoes, but he had eight years in which to do it. Mr. Cleveland, in his fifteen months term in office has made more vetoes than Washington, Adams, Jackson, Madison, Monroe, J. Quincy Adams, Van Buren, Harrison, Tyler, Polk, Taylor, Fillmore, Pierce, Buchanan, Lincoln, Garfield and Arthur made in their over seventy years in the presidential office, and it is probable that more vetoes will follow.

Honesty is Patriotism.

Mr. Cleveland's messages vetoing the swindling private pension bills have evidently hit some of the congressional brethren on the raw. One luminous individual from the up country rose in his place the other day to observe that he had searched these documents in vain for a single patriotic sentence, and he even disparaged of the republic.

There is a strong suspicion that the day when all manner of thievery could be carried on without question so long as the plunderers professed an undying devotion to the flag has passed by. The Belknaps, Robesons, Shepherds, Babcocks, McDonalds, Joyces, Dorseys and Bradys were all mighty patriots in their generation, and when it came to slinging red, white and blue eloquence they took a back seat for no body, but their crimes found them out after a while, and such of them as did not go to prison should have done so.

It is inferred from the tone of Mr. Cleveland's messages on the private pension swindles of congress that the fashion now is to be honest—as honest in the pressure of a fraud who steals the livery of a United States soldier as in the pressure of a round rolling monopolist who is looking for a subsidy for some fat corporation. In times like these honesty is the highest form of patriotism, and dishonesty, no matter whether it folds itself in the American flag or not, is the most contemptible expression of treason.—Traverse Herald.

NOTES AND NEWS.

The New York Star is doing some good work in support of the administration.

The republican state convention will be called to meet at Grand Rapids, Sept. 1st.

Some of our republican exchanges are bemoaning B. M. Cutcheon for Son Conger's place. We are of the opinion that the General will have to dust himself pretty lively if he retains his present place, without attempting a climb uphill.—Eagle.

The president has now vetoed eighty-four pension bills, and, so far as intelligent judgement can determine, has not vetoed a single one that should become law. When it is remembered that to do this with knowledge and justice he has had to examine into the record of over six hundred cases, some idea can be formed of the immense amount of labor which has been thrust upon him by a lazy, reckless, and faithless congress.—Chicago News.

The pension demagogues in congress must be getting a tolerably clear idea by this time of what Mr. Cleveland is there for. His little veto messages reveal the dishonesty of the average legislator as cleverly as much longer ones would. When no old soldier in congress will take the trouble to oppose these "private" calls in the interest of frauds, bounty-jumpers, and deserters it is a glorious thing for the worthy pensioners of the country that there is a President who will defend them against enforced association with such creatures.—Chicago Herald.

The Young Democracy.

"The young democracy who are coming to the support of the party where they secure recognition," is the reply that Chairman Enright of the state committee made when asked, "Where will carry Michigan this fall? Himself a splendid representative of this class, he knows whereof he speaks. With comparatively a young man in the executive chair, the revived democracy has reorganized the young men of the nation as they have never before been organized. The old time distrust of young men has disappeared in a sensible measure and it is the young men that furnish the working energy and enthusiastic work that carries campaigns nowadays. The accessions to the democracy from the new voters has been very large. They have realized the great power of its underlying principles of fairness to all, the wariness of its political trinity of "free trade, free coinage, and free men" and its opposition to the monopolistic tendencies of the party of political arrogance and aristocracy. Naturally, in a party ruled by these latter forces, as has been republicanism, its bestowal of political emoluments and honors must be upon that class only. The young men of today will have none of this. He will swing in where his interests, his ability and tact are recognized. This means that he will be a democrat with fervor and enthusiasm.—Kalamazoo Gazette.

There is a Difference.

The Minneapolis Tribune: "Yes, we are not disposed to deny that in 1884 Mr. Cleveland was elected president and Mr. Blaine was defeated. But the fact remains that Cleveland can now make speeches by the yard and no one will care one swear what he says, while when Mr. Blaine gets up to speak he has the whole world for an audience, and the press of every civilized nation thinks it necessary to comment upon what he says. There must be some difference between the two men somewhere." There is a difference. The president is not a demagogue and has never been in the habit of making vale-catching speeches by the yard, but his single phrase, "A public office is a public trust," is worth more than Blaine ever uttered or wrote or ever will utter or write, and if it is outlived by any phrase of Blaine it will be "Burn this letter," "A deathless enterprise," "Let me know what I am to expect," "Cast an anchor to the windward," and other passages from the celebrated Mulligan letters.—Chicago Times.

An Executive Session.

She was the daughter of a senator, and her sweetheart had been to see her every night, since Lent had given time and opportunity. Her father became somewhat alarmed, and his morning ire called her into his study.

"Well, papa," she said sweetly, "you sent for me. What is it?"

"My dear daughter," he replied, "I believe Mr. Blank has been to see you every night for some time past?"

"Yes papa."

"And he was here last night?"

"Yes papa."

"Well, daughter, I want to know what occurred between you during your protracted interview in the parlor. I ask it my child, because I have especial reasons for wishing to know?"

"Dear papa," replied the girl with tears in her eyes, "I do not doubt your right to ask what occurred there; but, papa, it was an executive session; and papa, you would not have me divulge the secrets of such a meeting, would you?"

The old man said never a word in reply.—Washington Critic.

Something or Other.

During the last session of the Kansas Legislature some of the members were greatly annoyed by a man who wanted a charter. He didn't seem particular whether it was a charter for a bank, railroad, canal, navigation or manufacturing company, and this led to the inquiry:

"What good would a charter do you, anyhow?"

"Well, you see, I want to go to practicing medicine here, and I have no diploma and can't get one. If I can get a charter for something or other and hang it up in my office, you folks in this state won't know the difference. Please have the clerk fill out with red ink and tie a blue ribbon to it."—Wall Street News.

The Force of Habit.

"The force of habit is a wonderful thing," said the philosophizing passenger who experienced upon the floor, "men just to show you. I'm a photographer out in the country here apiece, and the other day I was called out to take a negative of a dead man. At my suggestion his relatives propped him up on some chairs so that his position would be somewhere near natural, and then stood back while I took him. After fixing the lens I stepped out, looked to see that everything was all right, said 'now, hold still a moment, please,' and made the exposure. Right there was the first laughter that had been heard in that house for two weeks."—Chicago Herald.

IT PAYS ITS WAY.

Mr. Whitney Says the Administration Does and will do no Jobbing.

WASHINGTON, June 15.—The various stories that have been set afloat about proposed jobbing trips this summer by the president and members of his cabinet are without foundation in fact. Neither the president nor any member of the administration has any thought of going on any pleasure excursions on a naval vessel. That sort of thing came to a full stop on the fourth day of March, 1885. The president has at all times refused to use government vessels for his private purposes, and will not take a day's sail on any naval vessel as a recreation from his fatiguing duties. There is no more punctilious member of the cabinet in this matter than Secretary Whitney, who was recently falsely reported as about to make a pleasure tour of the lakes on the government steamer Michigan. When asked about the matter Mr. Whitney replied:

"I never heard such a trip proposed until I saw the report in the news papers. At no time have I planned or contemplated using a government vessel on any other than necessary government business. I have adopted a rule with regard to the use of such vessels from which I shall not deviate. Any public business that a government vessel can be useful in connection with it, in my opinion, a perfectly legitimate use of the boat. For instance, when we went down the bay to welcome the Frenchmen with the statue of liberty the expense of running the ship was properly the government's, for she was upon a legitimate public errand. The official trips of congressional committees, like that to the Hampton school, is also a proper use of a government vessel. If I had a fund for entertaining persons on board on such occasions, that expense might also be a proper one; but I have no appropriation, and no expense for the entertainment of people on board of any government vessel has ever been charged to the government during my administration. I have always personally paid every extra expense incurred by reason of my being on board a naval vessel. The steward keeps an accurate account of everything, and renders me a bill. Thus, when I went down the bay to meet the statue of liberty, I paid every cent of expense except the cost of running the ship, which was properly the government's, and when we took the president from the South, and came to the train I bore that extra expense. I have always tried to make clear the distinction between a proper public use of government vessels and their private use, and I am sure that the charge of junketing cannot be laid against this department or any other branch of the administration."—New York Sun.

Japanese Puzzled by a Negro.

"When I was in the country (of Japan), in the interior a foreigner was a curiosity equal to the first Chinaman or Jap seen by us here. On a visit made to the summit of Fujiyama in the summer of 1871 I went to the famous hot springs at Hakone; at nearly every tea-house our party was so much of an exhibition as the woman with big feet is here. A colored servant, dark as Erebus, whom I had with me, was a phenomenal subject to the innocent Japs. The men and women would come up to him, try to rub the black off with their hands, and be surprised they could not, and laugh over it with the contagious and hilarious glee the people so much enjoy."—Philadelphia Times.

The ladies of the M. E. society will give dinner, with ice cream, lemonade, pies, pudding, etc., on Saturday, at the Sentinel building. All are invited.

A writer in the Grand Rapids Democrat calls Charlevoix "the purest little gem of a summer resort east of out doors in a cold winter." The same writer says Petoskey is a fine town, full of business, but "is not so charming as Charlevoix."

The Friant will run excursions from Harbor Springs and Petoskey to Charlevoix and East Jordan on Saturday, Sunday and Monday, July 3, 4 and 5.

The "dictator" seems to be in bad temper this week. Perhaps in his been quoting too freely from some "irresponsible journal" and got left on the facts.

Harrison Miller returned home from Beaver Island, and his son Charlie Miller, from the north shore to attend the funeral services of Ruth Miller, on Saturday.

A Northport correspondent says there is a strong probability that the county seat of Leelanaw county will be removed from Leland to Suttons Bay in the near future.

It is wonderful how much solid and interesting reading can be given for one dollar, the price of the Chicago Weekly Herald for one year. Subscriptions received at this office.

The steamer City of Grand Rapids gave an excursion from Traverse City to East Jordan last Sunday, which was well patronized. A large number of the excursionists stopped off at Charlevoix.

The difference between an advertisement in the newspaper and a sign on your store front, is that to see the sign people have to come to your store, while an advertisement in the paper goes to them every week.

The steamer Queen of the Lakes is making regular daily round trips be tween Elk Rapids, Old Mission, Bowers Harbor and Traverse City. Whether the arrangement is a temporary or permanent one we have not learned.—Eagle.

Miss Ruth Miller died last Friday morning after a short but very severe illness. Funeral on Saturday, at the family residence, Rev. C. F. Van Anken officiating. Ruth was a bright, buxom lass of seventeen, (just seventeen on the day of her death) fitted by education and personal graces to fill the responsibilities of life in a true womanly manner, and the news of her sudden death falls like a crushing blow on relatives and friends.

The ladies of the Congregational Church at Boyne gave a strawberry and ice cream festival last Friday evening in their new building. Although it was in a very unfinished condition, the room presented quite a cheerful appearance the windows and tables decorated with flowers. Financially the entertainment was quite a success, thirty dollars being realized. Many expressed sincere regrets at the absence of a speaker. Another entertainment is being worked up for the coming month.

L. E. Allen's pile driver, now at work on Hannah Lay & Co's new dock, one week ago to-day beat the record of all pile drivers that was ever in the Grand Traverse region. They drove sixty piles and quit work at 4 o'clock. This is the biggest day's work of the kind on record.—Traverse Journal. This day's work will be better understood when it is stated that the nature of the earth at that place is such that over 6,000 blows were struck with a 2,600 lb. hammer, with 20 feet fall, to accomplish the work.

G. H. Hill, of Cincinnati, owner of the property on the corner of Bridge and Clinton streets, is in town this week, looking after his interests. He purchased of Mr. Eaton the buildings and lease, now occupied by the Bazar, sas. and pestoffice, and has placed all the property in E. H. Gaven's hands for sale, except the corner lot on Clinton street, which is to be retain for rent. The Bridge street front is platted into lots of 20 feet running west 90 feet to a twelve-foot alley, and are held at $70 a foot front, except the corners, the one on the alley being held at $60 a foot, and the one on Clinton street is not yet for sale in any price. The Clinton street front is held equally high. These are exorbitant prices for Charlevoix, and the holding vacant of so much land in the heart of the village is a positive damage. Men who hold their property up to such a figure should pay taxes for the full amount.

Ironton's New Band.

Ironton's new band held its first concert Saturday evening, the occasion being the return of Mr. W. M. Adams, with his charming bride from New York. The time chosen was "Le Chivaree," which was played with great unction. The members of the band numbering about two hundred formed a hollow square in front of the "Lake View House" and at a given signal sounded the opening notes of "Chivaree." Some of the chief musicians as nearly as could be ascertained were as follows: Leader, Geo. McMullen; saxii horr, John Folsom; musketry quartette, by unknown parties; chief screamer, E. L. Burdick; short iron rattler, E. B. Hodge, W. M. Smith, and other members of the G. A. R. post; saw bum mentors, John Garland, Wm Garland Geo. Winkle; spokesman, E. A. Lewis. After the music had proceeded for fifteen minutes the young couple in whose honor the entertainment was arranged, appeared upon the veranda and Mr. Adams in well chosen words thanked the band for the compliment and heartily expressed their fine appreciation of the high order of music afforded. He then invited all into the hotel, where cigars, peanuts, lemonade and cake were served, the band responding with three cheers for Mr. Adams and three cheers and a tiger for Mrs. Adams. After refreshments, by earnest request, a parting salute was played, when Mr. E. A. Lewis stepped from the ranks and expressed the thanks of the band for the cordial manner in which they were received and wished the newly wedded couple health, happiness and prosperity. A gentleman then proposed three cheers for Mr. and Mrs. Adams. So ended a pleasant occasion.

M. E. Church.

Next Sunday being the Fourth of July, the pastor has chosen for his subject—"The exaltation of national character."

At the evening service, Judge J. M. Rice, of Cadillac, will deliver a lecture. As a lecturer Mr. Rice does not have to be introduced to the Charlevoix people, he is already well known to them.

The sermon at Black's school house at 3 o'clock next Sunday will be delivered by a Charlevoix County boy, Rev. Adam Clark.

Barnard.

The hay crop is looking poor on account of dry weather.

Mr. Adam Clarke has returned home from Olivet College, to spend his summer vacation.

The men of Barnard are mending their ways.

Mr. Isaac Mills has his new barn nearly completed.

John Walker had the misfortune to cut his hand quite badly one day last week, which will lay him up for some time.

Burgess.

Everybody is at work mending their ways.

Gov. Wolf Orders Trespassing Cattle Off Indian Grazing Lands.

DALLAS, Texas, June 25.—Yesterday was the last day of grace for trespassing cattle on Indian territory, the 40 days' grace granted by the secretary of the interior having expired. The cattle have all been driven off the Kiowa and Comanche reservations. The remaining trespassing herds are on the territory of Choctaws, Cherokees, Creeks, Seminoles, and Chickasaws. The most of them being concentrated on the dominion of the latter nation. Gov. Wolf sits down upon all purchases made by the Indians subsequent to the order of the secretary of the interior as deliberate and willful fraud upon the Chickasaw people, and declares the same to be unlawful, and therefore null and void.

The governor further says he will hold, confiscated, enough of these cattle to pay $1 per head to the Chickasaw nation, commencing yesterday, June 24, and will expel those remaining by men summoned for the purpose.

"AVE MARIA."

BY A. E. BUSBY.

A sound floats up from the valley,
Through the tall pine trees,
And the fragrant odor of incense,
Comes on the breeze!
The bell is ringing, ding, dinner
And fast to the ground
And lilies are white in the twilight,
As I hie to the sound.
It comes from a stately building,
Its lofty spires gleam clear;
For the melody unseen charming
Is sweet, so dear.
And "Hail" they cry, sweet Mary,
For His dear sake
For the shadows all will flee
When this day begins to break.

The white robed priest at the altar
Intones but a minute,
And softly the vesper floats
The requiem of the day,
In one strain a sound of sorrow
Another a note of joy,
For the soul that has passed from the bright
Ones of the earth
Ever and ever and again
Pal the dim, faint light in the chancel
Shine faint or pure and white,
And lips that in prayer are moving
For anthem, place, and light
And "Hail," they cry, sweet Mary,
Let the shadows flee away
Let the shadows flee away
And light begin to break.

But see the purple twilight
Is creeping up the sky,
And the pale stars in the heavens
Gleam out, one by one,
For the solid shadows are taller,
And the place looks drear and lone,
As away by my side, as walker
That sad man-one.
Well, Frank, said I, we are nearly at the end of this journey, are we not?
"I guess we are, Colonel, he replied.
"Then you are not certain about it?
"I thought I was, he replied, in a puzzled way, and looking about for landmarks.
"Do you recollect where you are?" I inquired, after a short silence.
"He admitted that he did not, and, although he declared 'he didn't know how he could have made such a mistake,' I realized that we must be seeking a lodging for the night without delay, for the storm had gathered violence, and would soon discharge itself.
"We must make haste to get the fire house," I said, and urging the tired horses onward, we kept a sharp look-out for some habitation.
"But this was not met with when desired. We had escaped the country, and a great many of the towns we passed were unlocated and dismantled.
"As it grew darker and darker, the prospect of remaining outside at the mercy of the storm began to cause some discomfort.
"There's a house! shouted Frank at last, and, following his eyes, I saw a light a short distance back from the road.
"It was a small building, unpainted, and did not promise much in the way of entertainment. Nevertheless, my kind of shelter is better than none in a storm, and we rode in through the open gate and dismounted.
"We were saluted by the barking of dogs from the back of the house, and before we had reached the door it was opened and a man appeared.
"We asked the way to our destination, and soon found that we had strayed many miles from the direct road.
"'You'll hardly get that to-night,' said the man, in harsh accents, and he did not refer a lodgings for ourselves and horses when it was requested.
"We accompanied him to the stable and saw our tired animals introduced to the company of a cow and a pair of oxen, then followed our host back to the house.
"I had taken a strange dislike to the man, and was not made more easy by his uncouth manners and gaitiant tones.
"The room into which he led us was already occupied by a short, brown woman, the man's wife, and three very dirty children. The children were ordered off to their by their mother, who, at her husband's suggestion, placed bread, butter, and a plate of cold potatoes upon the table for our delectation.
"I had often eaten worse fare with the relish which is given by sharp hunger, and did not despise the meal my companion was more dainty, and, while making a pretense of eating, fastened his eyes upon the master of the house.
"The latter would have created suspicion in a saint. He bore the exact description of the ruffian in an old poem I have read. He was stout and very hollow-eyed.
With mighty furrows in his stormy brows,
Long hair down his shoulders curled,
He's lost was vast.
In fact, I could not help sharing, to a certain extent, in my companion's fear, but we were in for it now, if danger was intended.
"We soon learned that our host was a violent partisan of the South; that he had lost two sons upon the battle-field, and that he would have shouldered arms himself if it hadn't been for the old woman!
"He did not seem to consider us foes, and Frank thought it necessary to express sentiments in favor of the man's principles.
"As we were preparing to retire for the night the door opened and a stout young man entered, shaking the water from his clothes.
"He was a neighbor, apparently, for the master addressed him as a familiar friend, and as we followed our hostess from the room, I observed a signal pass between them, followed by glances, menacing, I thought, cast in our direction.
"The apartment into which I was ushered was small, with no furniture except the bed, and without a door.
"My companion was to be in an adjoining room, separated from mine by a rough partition for the 'poor place,' as she called it, and ended by saying that her sons had once occupied the rooms, and mebbe my friends had killed them.
"This suggestion came so abruptly that it startled me. It was the first intimation given that our profession was understood.
"I made some commonplace remark, and was left alone, to sit up if I could, which was not at once.
"I heard the family retire; then all was still save the patter of the storm outside. I felt oppressed, as though with the sense of approaching misfortune.
"The feeling of our ill-looking host was continued to be uppermost in my mind, attended by all the whimsical circumstances and incidents that an active imagination could furnish.
"At last, after tossing about for hours, I fell asleep. How long I lay oppressed I know not; but when I awoke it was with a start, and my faculties were upon the qui vive at once.
"I heard some one in the hall without my room. He came with the stealthy movement of one ill-disposed to be seen.
"My kinsfolk host, was coming to avenge the death of his sons, was the idea that flashed into my heated brain, and trembling from the cold I begin to feel about me for my clothes.
"They were not where I had placed them. Had the assassins removed them? I asked, but they no, it perpetrate their meditated crime in the dark?
"So it seemed, and taking a large, strongclubbed sharp-knife from my pocket of my pantaloons, I stole toward the door, resolved to meet the villains and take them by surprise.
"I reached the door in the dark, and felt I knew it had stopped outside. Some form was before me, and I felt, or fancied, the breath of my side, and the next instant was grappled by a pair of strong hands.
"My knife was knocked from my hand, and I struggled with the desperation of a man trying to prevent the blow which I expected would fall.
"I succeeded in throw my assailant to the floor, but his limbs seemed formed of steel. I felt and struggled, and several times, and at last we fell, and rolled over and over upon the floor.
"All this occupied but an instant; but I was already feeling weak. My adversary was too strong.
"Suddenly there had a last desperate effort, and we fell upon the stairs, rolling over and over reached the bottom.
"The fall seemed to stun us, and I staggered to my feet a light appeared, carried in the hand of my host. The man was looking out upon us through the partially open door of her bedroom.
"'Go on, Colonel,' I cried; 'why do you pause?'
"There's not much more to tell. I had been hurting all this time with Frank, the new recruit, and my good host was so innocent of all sinister intention as the sleepy chickens whose slumbers we disturbed.
"My companion had gone to sleep, oppressed with uneasy thoughts concerning the murder of the house, a terrible dream had followed, and still under the influence of the ghastly hag who rides our dreams, he had risen from his bed, only to awake to grapple in the struggle for life which followed.
"We rode away the next morning with better feelings toward our host, but leaving friends of the cabin, and did not trouble them with the suspicion we had formed of their character."

Bill Nye on House-Cleaning.

It is now the season of the year when we begin to scence up around our premises and yet on the aire of spring. A few wellturned remarks upon matters of general interest to housekeepers, coming from one who understands fully what he is talking about, may be beneficial. If they are received in the proper spirit my object will have been attained. All I care for is to furnish all the information I can and do all the good I can. Life is made up of these little acts of kindness, and to be well informed, and then to be able to spread that information around all over the country in such a way as to ameliorate the condition of our sons, is a most delicious thing for the possessor, and a great boon to those who may be the recipients of that information.

A good, durable whitewash may be made by slacking pure lime with salt and a light solution of water. Add, while cold, and stir gently while boiling, so that it will not burn out. Let it stand two days and then carefully skim it. If it does not settle readily drop in the vessel a few cents worth of the lime water, and it will soon settle. It is a great mistake to make glue or baking powder with whitewash that is to be used on the walls or ceiling of a parlor.

A gallon of milk will improve a large quantity of whitewash, but the cream must be taken off before the milk is used. To apply whitewash on a ceiling is not a difficult process, and many people pay a professional when they might do it equally well themselves.

Take a whitewash brush of about the medium height and dip it in the liquid preparation. Next carefully remove the surplus by gently pressing the brush against the side of the pail. You can then stand on the piano and apply the solution to the ceiling, a little at a time. If you do this, however, do not forget and step forward into the works of Mr. Steinway, or set the pail on the strings while you are at work. After you have been at work for a few minutes and got your sleeves well filled with whitewash, you may empty them back into the pail, thus saving the surplus, which otherwise might be wasted. Care should be used in mastering oil paintings and lithographs in the vase. Some of paintings look better spattered with whitewash, while others do not. For this reason a keen discrimination is necessary, and every man should be supplied with the brush.

Whitewash may be removed from the eye by the judicious use of muriatic acid, which cuts the lime and purifies the eye itself, removing any animal substance also it may have fallen into the socket, including the eye itself.

Maple sugar may be made by squeezing the juice out of the maple tree and boiling it down to about the consistency of the spring poem. The maple flavor is not injurious to the taste, and does not interfere with the popularity of this pastime. Some days for the last journal, Mech maple syrup and sugar took in Vermont, and I have often wondered what becomes of this healthful beverage. Why maple syrup made from the juice of the maple tree, should not find its way into the markets of the country is more than I can understand.

A clump and hedy window curtain may be made of the finest lattice, cut the proper length, and then decorated with pretty flowers. Most any lady can readily paint these flowers in any design, or at least great many seem to think they can. The flowers may be any variety which fancy may dictate, such as corn flowers, daisies, pansies, or forget-me-nots, and, if they do not look natural at first, they may be sweet while still given by looking the curtains in a solution of bromine and turpentine, say two parts of the former to ninety-eight of the latter.

A design to which my attention has been recently called consists of a unique, unpressed flower, composed by a young lady who is destined to make her mark some day, unless some one interferes. She has already taken her mark in several places, but that these flowers certainly deserve some thing more than a mere passing notice. They are not copied from the monotonous and tedious nature-work, but are affected in nature, but they stand out in bold relief and attract the attention at once, because of their bold originality. Instead of being nature, and thus becoming tiresome, she has conceived a design that is a cross between a rose cancer and a ginger cake. It is very much admired by those who like a dark green tint dark with bulb on it, and I think the remarkable success of this aggravated fellow on a dark red thinds, just appeals out of a plain green wallpaper background.

Having so held in conception or so utterly free from conventionality has come within a page of obscurity for years. The inflammatory condition of the brain, of the bold and mathematically perpendicular pose of the stem, and the slopes of equation visible in the complexion of the head, challenge the admiration of the philanthropist and the Board of Health.

It is now out as a work of art, and is safe from imitation. It certainly has never been successfully imitated by any man, I do not think it ever will be. Which not, we know to give or forbid, I do not know. I may safely say that she will never forgive us with a flower like this, a flower that looks as though it had been mailed on the road, and was not intended, when she fashioned it, would seem, was cut out of the ground and traveled to the custom by the hand of a master. It is a flower of that kind, fragile blossom of the vale that you could not possibly see in bending out a manly bonnet.

A Little Bard of Hearing.

Jonathan Dolph, a resident of old Rhode Island Quaker—who has a twoheir side, by the way, for all the virtues of Quid—was asking the subscriptions of his colleagues of the Senate for the wedding present they were to give Gen. Alson McCook, the Secretary of the Senate, at his marriage. He went to Dolph last of all, and said: "We are going to give McCook a wedding present. How much will you subscribe?" Dolph seemed astonished. Finally he said, with some appearance of confusion: "Why, I'll give something, of course, if you want me to, but I'd like a little time to think about it." "Oh, certainly," responded Chase, somewhat mifed, and then he walked off. Then Dolph hurried over to his colleague, Mitchell, of Oregon, and said to him in a pained way: "Chase asked me just now to join him in giving a wedding present to his cook. What do you suppose he's driving at? When my cooks get married I don't go around among other fellows to send them wedding presents." "Oh," laughed Mitchell, who had been in the Senate before, "he meant McCook—Anson McCook, the Secretary, you know. It's the custom, you know, for Senators to give the officers of the Senate presents when they get married." "Oh," said Dolph, laughing freely again, "of course, of course."

It is related that when the first Maine railroad was started, about forty years ago, W. G. Crosby, of Hallowell, was a conductor. One rainy morning he started from Waterville, and on arriving at North Belgrade, a flag station, not seeing any flag, ran by the station. Just as he passed the station the red flag was run out for some passenger to get on. Mr. Crosby stopped his train, and asked Stephen Ireland-man, the station agent, why he did not display the flag before Mr. Richardson replied: "Do you want to run your train in rainy weather? I didn't think you would."

If you grasp a rattle-snake firmly about the neck he can not hurt you, says a contemporary paper. If you do it perfectly safe, it would be well to let some one else do the grasping.

Manual Training in Philadelphia.

A revolution in educational methods has occurred in the city of Philadelphia. The Spring Garden Institute, established long ago by Mr. Charles G. Leland, showed the practicability of hand-training; Mr. Edward T. Steel, President of the Board of Education, for years advocated manual training in a general way; and Mr. James MacAlister, who went from Milwaukee, Wis., in 1885, to accept the superintendency of the schools of the city, writes that he found public opinion fully alive to the importance of manual training being added to the public education, but that nothing had been done to give it organized shape. It is easy to understand how, under his magnetic influence, the movement quickly crystallized. Moved by the persuasive force of his tongue and pen, the "Committee" appropriated money, and the Board of Education organized a manual training school as part of the educational system of the city, as free as any other of the public schools; and it went into operation in September last, with one hundred and thirty pupils—all that could then be accommodated. Its course of instruction is similar to that of the schools of Boston, St. Louis, and Chicago. The school is a high school, and manual exercises constituting a feature of equal importance with the mental exercises. The first observation in regard to this new school made by visitors is that the pupils take more interest in its exercises than is usually taken by pupils in the exercises of schools of that grade. The school meets with the most unqualified approval of the public, and the Board of Education designs to establish three or four more schools of similar character. It is the purpose of the Superintendent and the board to furnish the schools with a reference library and a small museum, "illustrating the raw materials and manufactured products of the more important industries of the country, and, to some extent, drawings and models showing the evolution of the fundamental tools and machines."

Another feature of the reorganized educational system of Philadelphia is the School of Industrial Art, which is open to the grammar-school pupils of both sexes, who are admitted once a week for two hours. The course of instruction comprises drawing and design, modeling, wood-carving, and certain exercises in carpentry and joinery, and metal-work.

HUMOR.

A BALLET-GIRL is something of a philosopher; she believes in gauze and effect.

AN exchange, in speaking of a certain man, says: "He will spend some time looking after his business interests in this vicinity." Life seems hardly worth the living today if to many a tired, unhappy, discouraged woman who is suffering from chronic female weakness for which she has been able to find no relief. Not All Right.

A reporter called upon a prominent citizen and said: "I would like to interview you with regard to the strike." The prominent citizen frowned, reflected a moment and replied:

"No, sir, no. It is a rule of my life never to be interviewed, but I don't mind telling you privately what I think."

"All right."

"But mind, now, you must promise not to print a word I say nor an idea I advance."

"I promise."

The prominent citizen freely expressed himself. And the reporter, after again promising that he would make no note of the conversation, departed. Early the next morning the prominent citizen seized the paper and eagerly looked for the interview.

"What are you looking for?" his wife asked.

"Nothing," he replied as he threw down the paper. "You can't place my confidence in those confounded reporters."

"Has he printed what you said?"

"No."

"Then it's all right."

Men and Women.

Who are constantly nervous are, in nineteen cases out of twenty, dyspeptic. The twentieth case will be found, upon investigation, to be that of a person who is troubled with symptoms of indigestion. Tiresome, unnatural anxiety, powerlessness, fainting in the aura, a disposition to stand on the sudden closing of a door, tremulousness of the hands—more particularly of the right—show that the nerves are weak and nervous. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters strengthens and quiets the nerves. This effect is a speedy one. Dyspepsia, or its last stage, yields to the action upon the organs of digestion and assimilation. Constipation, Biliousness, Kidney Complaint, and Malarial Fever are also subdued by this invigorating regulative tonic. Nervous people should try it. It is a pleasant, perfectly harmless tonic and ease and sleep follow its use. Ask your druggist for it.

The Press on the Rum Traffic.

Next to the platform, the numerous and effective agencies of the press are the most potent influences to bring to bear on the liquor problem.

And it will be found that there is no power on earth that can keep the people in subjection to the rum power, when we bring the light of reason, through the means of the printed page, to their understanding. The printed page is like the noonday sun, it will scatter the cobwebs of selfish subserviency to the liquor interest, and awaken enlightened consciences, that will not be satisfied until this vile traffic is banished from the land.

The printed page is the silent monitor that enlightens the millionaire in his seclusion, the workman in his shop, the merchant in his mart, the scholar in his study. The father, mother, sister and brother, and all classes and conditions are furnished food for thought. While none are too poor, or too low, for this means to reach them. Therefore let the printed page be scattered broadcast over the country as our most effectual weapon to crush this monster evil. Let the inspiration and struggle of our intellect be to attain to higher and broader views as to our duty and obligation, and keep our minds in constant action to thwart the selfishness and dignority of the rum seller, in his depredations on the best interest of the people. The press has already removed the dust and stains of ignorance, and opened a mountain of light, and taught the people their broad claim to common justice and their right to immunity from this vile poison which so effectually interferes with their malleable right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, and we, the people, will also learn to resist the usurpations, fraud and chicanery, that the rum traffic has so long practiced on them through the political influence of degenerated party, and the credulity of their partisans.

We must know our rights and dare to maintain them against the sophistry of both the rum-seller, political trickster, and the so-called Church Temperance Society, and other organizations, whose principal aim and purpose is to make us believe in the fall of regulative this evil. This list is the most dangerous delusion of all, as their only method consists of a sanction of the crime of rum-selling for a money consideration; a wicked concession to justify the criminal business and make it reputable.

The printed page is the silent monitor that comes with its good influences to vitalize our intellectual energies, like the evening dew on vegetation, which makes no display, no sound, but how effective, how we see its results in the fresh life and vigor it imparts to the flowers and green grass, and even in masses all nature bloom and smile, with color and beauty, to gladden the eye and spread the blessings of gladness instead for the benefit of humanity. From Democrat's Journal July.

Intemperance and Labor.

Through the mouthpiece of John Swinton's paper, the organ of the labor unions, attention to the claim of the rum-power that they give employment to 500,000 men, and says: "Think of this, workingmen! Half a million men employed in destroying food, in making poison, etc., turning it into a poison that makes men fiends, wives and children orphans, the industrious idle, the intelligent unskilled, and sends women and children to work in place of men, thus filling the land with tramps and lowfers, for the workers to support. If it is true that every person who produces nothing beneficial to society is no better than a pauper, then all labor employed making, handling or selling such drinks is labor wasted, and people so employed are paupers and makers of paupers.

"The brewers, distillers, liquor, wine and beer dealers, are among the worst enemies of workingmen; the temperance people are their friends. The former rob them of their health, happiness and life; the latter want to see every man, woman and child, well housed, well clothed and fed. The objects of temperance are the abolition of poverty, crime, disease and premature death."

THE GLORIOUS FOURTH.

How the Day was Observed in Charlevoix.

Last Saturday was hot, dry, and dusty. But that did not in the least prevent the enthusiasm of Young America rising to the usual high pitch which nothing but a great noise will satisfy.

The people from the surrounding country began to arrive quite early, and the boats brought large numbers of excursionists from up the lake, notwithstanding another celebration was in progress at East Jordan.

The order of exercises was followed substantially as heretofore published.

At ten o'clock the procession formed at the Village Hall, and marched under the direction of Harrison Berdan, marshal of the day, to the opera house. In the procession were young ladies dressed in white, representing each state and territory in the union, led by Uncle Sam and Miss Columbia; also thirteen boys representing the thirteen original colonies of the union.

At the opera house the audience who braved the heat listened to music by the Charlevoix cornet band, prayer by the Rev. J. T. Iddings, reading of the poem, "Paul Revere's Ride," by Prof. Enos, and music by a glee club organized for the occasion. Judge J. M. Rice, of Cadillac, then delivered the oration, speaking substantially as follows:

This anniversary day comes to us with a deeper significance, a broader meaning than can be indicated by the thunder of cannon and the enthusiasm of a gala day of dress parade.

Nations are usually the outgrowth of necessity, their formation is a part of the plan and purpose of Supreme power, advancing humanity to a higher plane. Going back through the intervening years a careful analysis of the history of political thought discloses a continued forward movement toward broader and higher conditions.

The declaration of principles which formed the basis second only to the heroism of a century ago gathered, was not the result of spasmodic thought, but rather the culmination of events, the import of which the world has not yet fathomed. It was the resultant force of ideas, the marshaling and expression of convictions which had been growing in force, developed by slow processes until they became the dominant thought of the age.

The crumbling tombstones which mark their sunken graves are neglected, almost forgotten, but the spirit which inspired their heroic lives impressed upon the genius of our institutions is as fateless as are the gilt letters stars of heaven.

It is not my purpose to follow the fortunes of that little Spartan band in resisting the aggressions of European tyranny, in their weary marches and self sacrificing valor; it is enough to know that they formed a phalanx of bravery unsurpassed, that building for their posterity they left a legacy to all mankind, and that wherever despotic power shall seek to crush, the moral influence of their exalted patriotism shall become a shield of defence.

May we not rather briefly outline some of the results produced by their brave defense of liberty, and which owing the legitimate outcome of their self sacrifice as they relate to material, intellectual, and moral progress.

National power cannot be determined by army ranks, else in the view of on-looking nations we should have no standing. An army of 25,000 men is not the index by which foreign countries estimate our power of aggression or resistance, nor does it in any degree indicate the growth which the nineteenth century has witnessed in those resources which make a strong and independent nation. Material progress cannot be rightly measured by apparent military and naval strength. Glancing back a quarter of a century, we were brought to face a war of such magnitude, that viewing it in the clearer atmosphere of to-day, seems unparalleled. With a million of men in the field, armies of war, we found ourselves upon the verge of such a struggle as no other people could have successfully met, and which tested to the utmost our inherent national strength. A half century of peaceful pursuits devoted to building happy homes, fostering diversified industries, and to the unconscious accumulation of resources, produced a material development of which we little dreamed, and which prepared us for the supreme trial when it came. The serene flow of the peaceful years preceding the storm of 1861, largely prepared our nation to take her rightful place as first among the powers of the world.

Content in the development of commercial and agricultural interests, believing that the costly inheritance which we had received baptized in the patriotic blood of the fathers might be enjoyed and transmitted unimpaired, we pursued our way, building beautiful cities, weeping from the bosom of mother earth her hidden treasures, rearing mills and factories, felling forests and gathering bountiful harvests, and thus we laid a foundation of strength and endurance, which in the desperate days of war was like an anchor, and enabled the ship of state to safely outride its fury.

With a material growth, wonderful, almost incomprehensible, we have taken such a position before the world as can only be secured by dom constrated power.

Our first hundred years of national existence has placed us in the front rank among the nations of the earth, in point of wealth, military standing, statesmanship, and such resources as command the respect and admiration of all men.

Our increase in population to sixty millions, the rapid settlement of our vast public domain, the inventive genius of our people creating new and improved implements and compelling steam and electricity to do a large proportion of our work—these are some of the evidences of our progress, and the results which have come from the unflinching bravery of our revolutionary fathers, their self-sacrifice and heroic devotion to liberty. But national power and permanency cannot be determined by material progress alone, there are other and still more important factors which enter into the stability of free governments.

The men of the revolution not only had the courage of their convictions, but only possessed the personal bravery to pledge their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor to their country's cause, but they also possessed that mental power and equipoise which enabled them to skillfully plan and intelligently direct their war forces to the greatest advantage. Power is not so much physical as mental. Blind force is of little use either to its possessor or the world, it is force controlled and directed by wise methods that makes men powerful and nations strong. Germany's strength is not so much in her colossal army as in the controlling genius of a Bismarck and his compeers. England's standing is not so dependent upon her magnificent navy, and her war worn veterans as upon the intellectual power of a Gladstone and his associates. The successes which attended the war of the revolution were not so much the result of powerful armies and navies as of the intelligent direction of forces, the advanced thought and unconquerable spirit of independence which animated both the leaders and the rank and file. An important element which entered into the victories which were achieved by the federal over confederate arms, was the broader mental training and the more intelligent application of scientific methods in war of the northern over the southern soldiery.

Rising above the triumphs of physical courage, above the trophies of the battle field, interwoven into their successes, are grander victories than those which crown the hero of the conflict. The history of the revolution cannot be told in the record of its battles, brilliant as they were.

The declaration of independence and the written constitution of the states, evidence a breadth of thought, a knowledge of statesmanship, and a foresight of the needs of a free people which denote higher powers than ever result from the achievements of war.

From such an ancestry, to whose acknowledged bravery was added the still brighter crown of intellectual superiority, we have received our rich inheritance. The march of mind has kept pace with material progress, and in the higher realm of political thought we have been foremost among the nations.

The spread of education has closely followed the advancing tide of emigration; the common school has accompanied the woodsman's axe; colleges and universities have opened their inviting doors to every aspirant; the astronomer has investigated the phenomena of the heavens and unfolded the mysteries of its circling worlds; the philosopher has explored the entire realm of metaphysics; science has ranged the universe in search of truth; and art has exhausted all her resources to formulate results. The years have been heavily laden with patents of invention, and the opportunities for intellectual culture have been within the reach of all, and have incited our people to highest endeavor, until in all those attainments which enter into intelligent citizenship, we are not surpassed by the older nations of Europe.

The war of the rebellion largely changed the current of thought that in times of peace nations must prepare for war by providing large standing armies, which, while they assume to protect, impoverish the country, and are a constant menace to free government, and introduced the new doctrine that preparation for war is best made by such an administration of affairs as induces the growth of patriotism in the hearts of the people, and that national permanency depends not so much upon the numerical strength of her army, not so much upon the number of her officials, and the expensive armament of her land and naval forces, as upon the deep seated convictions of her sons "that governments of the people, by the people, for the people must not perish from the earth."

There is still a more important factor which enters into national success and permanency than material growth or even intellectual progress. It is the recognition of the moral in the formation of a government, the recognition of those essential elements that must form the basis, of those fundamental principles of equality and justice which lie underneath every perfect national edifice.

The primary cause which precipitated a conflict between the mother country and her colonies, was a claim of authority, a denial of equitable rights, which, while bearing oppressively upon them, was none the less unjust to herself.

Nations must protect the rights of their component parts, else the loss which result become their own. The refusal of the British crown to deal justly worked out for her defeat and for her colonies a grand future.

The same denial of equitable rights which caused the war of 1776, operating upon the new nation produced an almost equally disastrous result. Issuing triumphantly from the struggles of the revolution, forgetting that history repeats itself, forgetting these fundamental principles stated in the declaration of independence, disregarding those truths which they had declared to the world were self-evident, they vainly tried to build a stable government upon a corner stone of injustice and oppression. The grave mistake they thus made plunged the nation into a contest of such magnitude in later years, that often times the scales were almost evenly balanced between life and death, and with bated breath we awaited the doubtful issue.

To possess the elements of permanency, government must include such a progressive statesmanship as shall lead to the elevation of her constituency into higher as well as broader manhood. Our republic came into existence claiming to be the champion of equal rights, asserting the profound conviction of her people that all men were entitled to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. Her appeal to the world was based upon certain inalienable rights, her wisest philosophy recognized that prosperity depended upon maintaining political equality, that future security was conditioned upon a due and proper recognition of divine authority, and a faithful acceptance of the doctrine of the brotherhood of man, and with these principles as a guiding chart she took her place among the nations.

THE INDUSTRIAL OUTLOOK.

The Lake Shore switchmen in the vicinity of Chicago, until the last week became eight non-union men, have not been discharged, in accordance with a pledge made to them by Superintendent Wheeler, early in May. The strikers decided a number of freight cars and delayed passenger trains. The police had to resort to their clubs to prevent greater damages. The railroad officials are firm in their determination to fight to the end.

An exciting episode in the Lake Shore Railway switchmen's strike occurred at Chicago. It was said a chase of a locked Plate engine, literally Black with infuriated strikers, and a Milwaukee and St. Paul engine drawing a tender filled with men down the Lake Shore tracks after two engines drawing two caboose filled with railroad officials, imported switchmen, policemen, and reporters; and the exchange of pistol-shots for heavy iron coupling pins, bricks, and lumps of coal. The pistol shots were fired by Matt Philderon and four officers on the platform of the rear caboose, and the iron missiles and coal were hurled from the sloping tender of the Nickel Plate engine, which was slightly in advance of the Milwaukee one, and running tender first. At Grand Crossing the Lake Shore engines were obliged to come to a standstill. The pursuing engine was reversed, but not one second too soon, and, as it was, it went crashing into the caboose with such force to throw a number of men from the tender and drive the train forty or fifty feet forward. The instant the collision took place the officers scattered out upon the tracks and took possession of the Lake Shore engine and caboose, and they were then drawn back to Chicago, four miles on the pursuing engine were shot, but none dangerously.

Chicago dispatch: "The officials of the Lake Shore Road, being determined to resume business at their freight yards as soon about Monday, invited theatrical by driving along the track one hundred and twenty-eight special officers, armed with clubs, revolvers, or Winchester rifles. The crowds were driven from the crossings, the new cars loaded were protected in their work, and the yards were cleared of cars soon after midnight, and all was quiet for a time."

The business failures during the past five days, as reported by Dun, Barlow and Company, number 207, against 189 last week and 207 the week before. The failures in Canada 24, as compared with 19 the previous week. Bradstreet's Journal on its weekly summary of the financial and commercial outlook, reports as follows:

The movement of general merchandise at seaboard and inland points continues of unusual proportions, the aggregate of business transacted, considering the short day last week, and the fact that it was a week of holidays, being quite satisfactory in the general and distant inland centers. Reshipments are still a feature of the trade, and have led I-drive the Senate to the effect that the duties on sugar, tea, and other articles of general consumption, which Davis had fixed at the surrendered a Confederate cruiser were irreconcilable and illegal and should be expunged from the record. Wool and cotton goods continue the leading fabrics, the former showing a tendency to advance, the latter a tendency to decline. Iron and steel are stronger in consequence, and there is been a decided boom in the stock of pig iron, which has risen from $1 to $2 per ton, and seems to be the result of limited and very low stocks. Pig iron is also some improvement on last outlook, but the blast has been blown out of furnaces in the Conemaugh Valley. Breadstuffs have ruled quite active, and the tendency of prices has been upward, and shippers are buying with moderate freedom. Provisions have ruled very active, and have descended for some time, as does cotton, which has been in active demand, and prices have advanced 1-16 to 1-8 cent per pound lower. Lumbermen report that business is more brisk than for some time, and that prices are firmer. Leather and hides are quiet, but firm, and shoes are in better demand.

The visible supply of wheat and corn by respectively, 28,000,000 and 2,000,000 bushels, wheat having decreased since last report 1,000,000 bushels, while corn increased 20,000 bushels.

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

Following are the main provisions of the Randall tariff bill, as telegraphed from Washington:

The schedule to the present free list are spared: Rubber, beads, and timber in the rough, lumber, shingles, lath, pickets, and the rough, posts, and lumber. The bill repeals all forms of internal revenue taxation on tobacco of every description, and all leaves stemming the sale and disposition by farmers and manufacturers of their own leaf. It allows a drawback of the full amount of duties paid on imported materials used in manufacture of tobacco, snuff, and cigars, and provides for the free use of alcohol in the arts, manufactures and medicines. It repeals the tax on all classes the duty is fixed at three dollars per gallon, and provides that hereafter no imported unstamped, the carried or distilled spirits shall be delivered for consumption or sale, but shall be put into bond. Wines of the alcohol content of not exceeding twenty-four per cent, shall be subject to a duty of 40 cents a gallon, and those of a greater alcoholic content than twenty-four per cent, shall be subject to a duty of 50 cents a gallon. It repeals a portion of the duties on malt liquors, reducing the duty on ales, porters, and beers, in casks, to 1 cents per pound. Wooden and other clocks are to pay double duty, and an assortment of all classes the duty is fixed at three times the amount for which they would be subjected if imported unmasked

The moral effect of those principles of justice and equality thus acknowledged and adopted, coupled with the peaceful years which followed the revolution developed a vigorous physical life, that prepared the union for her great emergency. They had unconsciously grown a loyalty to country that made possible the grand achievements of our days of chaos, they had engrafted into the hearts of our people such a reverence for American citizenship, that all classes were inspired with a firm determination to maintain the integrity of the union of the states, even at the cost of all her material wealth, and the sacrifice of her best blood. They had so woven into the web of our national life a devotion to free institutions, as developed in our brave hearted wives and mothers the power to freely give their first and best for her protection. And thus to the moral corrections of the fathers, to the patriotism which came from a recognition of the inalienable rights of all men, are chiefly due our free homes, and through their heroism and that of their descendants we have come to possess our land of promise. Strong in valiant hearts, powerful in unlimited resources, unequaled in the advantages offered for mental growth and in the educational training of our people, unsurpassed in broad, progressive statesmanship, and unrivaled in point of moral attitude.

Glancing forward to an unknown future, we have need to remember that the stability and perpetuity of free institutions, rests upon other conditions than such as grow out of material progress. That great possessions and large armies are but instruments, the value of which depends upon their intelligent use.

We have need to keep in mind those great principles of righteousness which form the basis of our government and constitute our security, cherishing with ever increasing care those educational interests which produce in the nation as in the man the power to wisely direct and control material forces, and make them subserve the highest needs of humanity. Maintaining with ever increasing firmness those barriers which oppose the on-rush of evil, and slay the growth of immorality in the world.

We have need to keep abreast of advancing civilization, and in the realm of moral progress to keep ourselves as a nation in accord with the wisest and highest thought of the age, sending our salutation of equal rights and impartial justice to all men everywhere.

We have need to stand in the forefront of every moral reform, ready at all times to become the champion of the downtrodden and the guardians of the oppressed, and prompted by sympathetic hearts reaching out a hand to relieve wherever tyranny despots, to uplift wherever despotism degrades, and to grasp in the name of a common brotherhood the outstretched hand of the weak, the helpless and the suffering, realizing the grand ideal which was the inspiration of the fathers, realizing results which shall be continuous for all their heroic sacrifices.

We have need to put ourselves into the current which lead toward a higher life in governmental affairs, giving heed to the lessons of past ages, and seeking such a development of the moral in the individual as that national permanency shall be secured and the great work of reformation shall sweep on toward a more perfect consummation, a more perfect freedom from the withering, blighting curse of sin, upward toward the excellence of Him whose purity is his everlasting crown.

Altogether the day was a gratifying success, for which the managers can give themselves abundant credit.

Honest Pension Bills or None.

The change in the rule of the house of representatives proposed by Mr. Morrison on Tuesday was not only proper in itself but in the interest of honest pension legislation. It simply required that if pensions are to be voted they shall be paid, and that the bill granting them shall make provision for raising the revenue necessary to meet the expenditure involved. What could be more reasonable? If the advocates of pension legislation sincerely wish to benefit the soldiers they ought to welcome a rule that would make such legislation effective. "Why vote pensions," they might well ask "unless we authorize the raising of the money required to pay them?"

Mr. Reed declared that if there was anything in the logic presented in favor of the change it was equally applicable to all other subjects of appropriation. So it would be if the fixed charges and ordinary expenses of government were not practically a known sum always taken into consideration in levying the taxes. Any proposition to put our army on a war footing, to suddenly enlarge the navy, or to otherwise authorize an extraordinary expenditure exceeding the ordinary revenues of the government would be accompanied by a proposition to borrow money or to increase taxation. The pending pension legislation proposes an extraordinary increase in expenditure, and it ought to be accompanied by a provision for raising the necessary revenue. Mr. Reed's declaration that the consideration of the question of pensions ought to be separate from all others is nonsense. It cannot be separated from the consideration of how the money with which they are to be paid can be raised.

Not only was Mr. Morrison's amendment right in itself, but it accomplished a most salutary end in exposing the insincerity and demagogy of the republican attitude toward pension legislation. In order to cultivate the soldier vote they are now ready to support extravagant pension laws such as they never thought of passing when they had control of all departments of the government. They know that the democrats must either defeat these schemes or else shoulder all hope of reducing the present exorbitant taxes. If they are voted down in congress or vetoed by the president, then the republicans will raise an outcry about democratic hostility to the soldiers. If the majority in the house allowed the bills to pass, and the president signed them, an enormous deficit would thus be created, and the republicans would ring the changes on democratic incompetency and extravagance.

Mr. Morrison avoided this dilemma, and the republicans were furious. They tried in vain to lay his motion on the table, and then filibustered to prevent its adoption. So desperate is their opposition that they yesterday put a stop to all legislation rather than permit the consideration of the rule. They see in it an effective obstacle to the continuance of their double dealing with the soldiers. After the new rule is once adopted, they can vote for no pensions without taking the responsibility of raising the money wherewith they are to be paid. The question will no longer be an abstract one concerning the propriety of pensions, but the practical one, "Are the people willing to submit to a definite increase in taxation to pay such pensions as are proposed?" Mr. Reed sees this, and in an unguarded moment he declared that the object of the amendment is "to saddle on pension bills legislation which would result in the defeat of the bills themselves." What is this but a confession that the republicans who are so eager for pension legislation, rather than assume the responsibility of raising by taxation the requisite money, will vote against their own bills?

What humbugs these republicans are!—N. Y. Star.

Use of the Table-napkin.

The law governing the use of the napkin is thus set forth in Household Words:

The law of the napkin is but vaguely understood. One of our eminent metropolitan contemporaries informs an eager inquirer that it is bad form to fold the napkin after dinner; that the proper thing is to throw it with negligent disregard on the table beside the plate, as to fold it would be a reflection on the food and imply a familiarity that would not befit an invited guest. But the thoughtful reader will agree with us that this studied disorder is likely to be a good deal more trying to a fastidious hostess than an unstarched, replacing of the napkin in good order beside the visitor's plate. The proper thing is to fold the fabric with mistentatious care, and lay it on the left side of the plate, far from the liquids, liqueurs and coffee, and thus testify to the hostess that her care in preparing the table has been appreciated.

The Origin of Salt.

How did the salt originally get there? After all, when we say that it was produced by rock-salt, by evaporation of the water in inland seas, we leave unanswered the main problem. How did the brine in solution get into the sea at all in the first place? Well, one might almost as well ask, How did anything come to be upon the earth at any time in any way? How did the sea itself get there? How did this planet swim into existence at all? There was a suspect inquirer, recently deceased, who had a short way out of this difficulty. He held that the sea was only salt because of all the salt river water run into it. Considering that the salt rivers are themselves salted by passing through salt regions, or being fed by saline springs, all of which derive their saltness from deposits laid down long ago by evaporation from earlier seas or lake basins, this explanation seems somewhat of circularity. It amounts in effect to saying that the sea is salt because of the large amount of saline matter which it holds in solution. Cheese is also a concentrated preparation of milk; the duties of a sub-deacon are to perform subdeacon's functions; and opium pills one to sleep because it possesses a soporific virtue.

Apart from such purely verbal explanations of the saltness of the sea, however, one can only give some such account of the way it came to be "the briny" as the following:

This world was once a haze of fluid light, as the poets and the men of science agree in informing us. As soon as it began to cool down a little, the heavier materials naturally sank toward the center, while the lighter, were repelled by the ocean and the atmosphere, floated in a gaseous condition on the outside. But the great envelope of vapor thus produced did not consist merely of the constituents of air and water; many other gases and vapors mingle with them, as they still do to a far less extent in our existing atmosphere. By-and-by, as the cooling and condensing process continued, the water settled down from the condition of steam into one of a liquid at a dull red heat. As it condensed, it carried down with it a great many other substances, held in solution, whose component elements had previously existed in the primitive gaseous atmosphere. Over the early ocean which covered the whole earth was in all probability not only very salt, but also quite thick with other mineral matters close up to the point of saturation. It was full of lime, and raw flint, and sulphates, and many other miscellaneous bodies. Moreover, it was not only just as salt as at the present day, but even a great deal saltier. For from that time to this evaporation has constantly been going on in certain shallow inlets or areas, laying down great beds of gypsum and then of salt, which still remain in the solid condition, while the water has, of course, been correspondingly purified.—Cornhill Magazine.

Grafted Varieties of Fruit-Trees.

This opportunity to grow different kinds of fruit on one tree imparts a new and delightful interest to the orchard. The proprietor can always be on the lookout for something new and fine, and the few moments required in grafting or budding make it his. The operation is so simple and easy that he can learn to perform it himself, and there are always plenty of adepts in the rural vicinage to give him his initial lesson. While he will keep the standard kinds for his main supply, he can gratify his taste and eye with some pretty innovations. I know of an apple-tree which bears over a hundred varieties. A branch, for instance, is producing Yellow Bellflowers. As a correct print in its growth where it has the diameter of a man's thumb it may be grafted with the Red Baldwin. When the scion has grown for two or three years its leading shoots can be grafted with the Rexbury Russet, and eventually the terminal bough of this growth with the Early Harvest. Thus may be presented the interesting spectacle of one limb of a tree yielding four very distinct kinds of apples.—E. P. Roe, in Harper's Magazine for March.

A Toilet Secret.

Every one knows that the dress which Miss Alder-man wears at Delaton was designed by Alma-Tadema, but only recently has the world learned the secret of the toilet which makes it so statuesque. The dress is made of soft crepe, cut something like a large bolster case. It is thoroughly soaked in water, then run through a clothes-wringer, and not disturbed until quite dry. When slaken out it of course appears in long creases, when put on, a girdle is tied about the waist, and the dress is pulled through to the proper length and allowed to fall in its own clinging folds.

To the ladies of Charlevoix and vicinity: I would hereby announce that having opened Dressmaking Parlors on Mason street, third door west of State, I am now fully prepared to do work in all the latest approved styles, from the genuine tailor system of actual measurement, the only perfect system ever invented. Trial of the Fire Engine.

The hose did not arrive in time to put the new fire engine to full test on the Fourth, but did arrive on Tuesday of this week. A test of its capacity was commenced yesterday morning and continued until noon today.

The engine was placed on the dock near Upright & Emrey's warehouse, and when all arrangements were complete the nozzle was applied. In seven minutes the engine was stopped; in eight minutes there was water through 200 feet of hose. After ten minutes water was thrown about 200 feet from the nozzle; a trial was also made at 300 feet, but we did not get the measurements. The length of hose gave out, showing signs of bursting in several places, and was taken out. At 300 feet from the engine, water was thrown about 150 feet from the nozzle, on the south terrace, near L. E. Allen's residence, the engine yet being on Upright & Emrey's dock, lifting water three feet.

Afterwards a trial was made with two streams, through 200 feet of hose each. At this trial the old hand engine was put alongside for comparison, and a careful observer could see but little difference in the size and force of the streams.

In the trial for height, water was raised about 50 feet above Mackinaw flag pole,—an estimated height of about 70 feet.

After dinner, the engine was placed on the south approach to the bridge, and filled to raise water 10 feet. Then it was placed on the Hibbard Bros. Milling Co.'s dock, 35 feet above the water, and an effort made to throw it far up the top of the roof, 55 feet from the ground, but with 40 pounds of steam it could not be done. The hose nozzle then put out, and the machine taken back to the engine house.

New packing was put in in several places, and another trial given this morning from the mill company's dock. With 70 pounds of steam water was thrown well on to the roof of the mill, and the roof of the Fountain City house was thoroughly wet.

Then a trial was made at the bridge. With 90 pounds steam pressure, and 100 water pressure, one stream was forced over E. M. Clark's house, ninety-five feet of hose.

The ability of the machine to hold steam being questioned, it was kept on the bridge over an hour, and a uniform pressure of 80 to 90 pounds was maintained.

With the trial last night nearly every citizen was dissatisfied. It did not come up to the requirements, but no fault can be found with the work this morning.

Although the hose did not actually burst, numerous blisters could be found, through which the streams of water escaped.

At time of going to press the council has not accepted it.

A Warning.

Pain is given for the wise purpose of informing us of the presence of danger and disease. Any little exaltement of an unusual nature disturbs the balance of the system, the nervous energies are exhausted, and headache and a hundred other disturbances are the result. Many of the miseries of man and womankind might be cured and prevented were their approach heeded and resisted, having their origin in derangements of the liver and blood, dyspepsia, jaundice, indigestion, costiveness, and other unwholesome conditions. Evils of a disease nature find a certain cure by the use of Golden Seal Bitters. In this medicine, science, aided by art, has produced a rare combination of medicinal properties, wholly adapted to the cure of diseases common to mankind. The vitalizing principles embodied in Golden Seal Bitters will assuredly cure the broken down and shattered. Sold by Perry Weed and Dr. H. W. Crouter.

Broken Down Invalids.

Probably never in the history of Cough Medicines has any article met success equal to that which has been showered upon Dr. Bull's Cough cure. Thousands of hopeless cases of coughs, colds, and consumption have yielded to this truly miraculous discovery. For this reason we feel warranted in risking our reputation and money on its merits. Sold by Perry Weed and Dr. H. W. Crouter.

Dr. Price's Magic Pain Oil is Used for both internal and external pain.

Old days! old days! how happy they,
When youth and hope were round
When flowers swung bright on every bough,
And joy in every mind!
When life on the meadow land was fair,
The sky was ever blue,
And every bird, with sun-dazzled wing,
Would coax of hope and love!

Old dreams! old dreams! how fancy wove
Her spells in youth and pride!
Brighter than all the world lies
That dark, that fatal day
Their magic power I cherish yet,
The pain I from it bell.
Although life's sad reality
I know full well—full well!

Old time, how bright they shine
Their memory's mellow haze;
And brought back down on me
Their long-departed days!
A father's smile, a mother's tear,
A sister's gentle look,
Ah, how they crowd my heart! I've turned
Its mirror's open nook!

Sweet words of love they sound again!
An echo from the past!
They come to me upon the ear—
They will forever last!
They come to me in dreams—
Those dreams with bliss so
The happy state that shine on me
Down out eternity!

THE COURIER'S RIDE.

BY DANIEL KNIGHT.

It was the night before the battle of Shiloh, and we were five miles below Pittsburg Landing. Buell's forces had been gathering, preparatory to joining General Grant, to aid in the battle of Shiloh, then daily expected. In the following details I shall only narrate the part which I acted personally, during the army and its movements to the historian.

It was the evening before the battle that a General unknown to me, belonging to Buell's army, hailed me and asked to what corps I belonged, my name, Carlisle's or not, and company, all of which I answered, to noting my answers. He then asked if I would be willing to go with an officer of his staff upon a night ride to Pittsburg Landing.

He said: "I am General Nelson, and prefer a volunteer courier if I can get one, as they are always better men for the work."

I replied that I was willing to undertake the duty when properly detailed and instructed. My answer seemed to please him.

He answered: "As soon as possible go to your quarters, feed your horse, yourself, and the sooner you are ready the better."

This seemed like a strange speech, coming from a stranger whom I had never seen before, but, more having seen, not liable to forget.

He was a large, fleshy, slant-spoken man, and his words carried authority with them. It was now getting on toward night, and I soon after left the line and went to camp. I had fed my horse, and was making my coffee, when an orderly came and directed me to report at the Captain's tent. Going to headquarters to report, I met General Nelson coming out. I obeyed him. He returned the salute, and said:

"Be off as soon as possible, corporal. I left your instructions with your Captain. We were intending to send Lieutenant Millman with you, but he is on the sick list, and perhaps it is just as well. Be careful, but get there as soon as your horse can get you there. Time will in all probability be fighting when you get there. But it must not stop you. Go directly to General Grant and deliver your message to him and only to him. If there are scouts or cavalry on this side of the river to intercept you, you must conceal your papers, or destroy them if in danger of being taken. If you destroy the papers and yet succeed in getting through, and the fight is in progress, as I am almost certain it will be before you can possibly get there, say to General Grant that General Nelson's division will be in line with him before the sun goes down."

He then mounted and rode away. I entered the Captain's tent. He and Major Brackett were seated at a small writing table, examining a small military map.

The Captain said: "Dan, you have got yourself into business. General Nelson has just left an order to detail you to go to Pittsburg with papers for General Grant. It is a dangerous service. You are to take a road some four or five miles south, as there are many sentinels on this, and it would consume too much time to stop and explain who you are to each; hence, it is deemed advisable to take the other road, by which you run the risk of meeting guards of the wrong color. Basil Duke is on this side of the river somewhere. In the event—well, there is no use of giving you directions. Be your best, as we trust you will. You are to start on a very important as well as dangerous mission, and are expected to deliver these papers to General Grant by noon to-morrow. Get there by your own devices. A darky will guide you to the south road, and Sergeant Whitehall at the picket guard will see you safe on your route."

I took the papers, thanked the Captain for the compliment, and as soon as possible was in the saddle.

I found the guard waiting, and a little before 9 p. m. we started out of camp. On arriving at the road the sergeant wanted me to take the negro, but I declined, preferring to change it alone, and bidding them a cheerful good-by, cantered away.

It was very lonely for the first hour, but gradually the desire to succeed began to take its place, and I felt that I was getting on famously when I discovered to my right a fire. I was tempted to go upon the road, but it was too dark to determine. I pressed forward, watching the fire, and soon saw men about it. Then settled the question, and I knew they were a rebel picket. How was I to get by them was the question—a very important question just then. There were too many of them for me to dash by them. My horse wanted to whinny. I had to stop him several times to keep him quiet.

For five or six minutes I sat there watching that camp, when I heard a horse approaching from the same road I had come. I pulled off the road to let it pass, thinking it a dolmary, but when they got opposite the fire stopped—two persons, one on foot, one on horseback—and I heard the following dialogue.

"Now, dem, Steve, what's ar goin' to do? Dem's de Secesh, an' if we leds dem catch us we's better an dead niggers."

"Well, but we don't gwine to let dem catch us, sassy; of course, dey would stand us too quick. But see here, boy; you mention dat path out yonder de Masse Jenkins? Wal, dat's—"

"What dat, boy—"

My horse was uneasy; he snuffed, and the remark of the nigger in regard to the path was so satisfactory that I broke up them, cautioning them to keep quiet. I told them that I did not want to interfere with their plans, but that I did want to get around the fire without being seen, and that if they knew of any way I should be glad to have them show me it.

The old negro, the first speaker, asked, "Is you a Linkum nigger?"

I said I was.

He seemed greatly pleased at this; said the rebels at the fire were "Ole Duke's city niggers," that he and his son were trying to get to our army at Pittsburg Landing, and that if the rebels caught them they would shoot them without asking a question. And, as I afterward learned, he was right in so saying, as they showed no mercy to fugitives trying to reach our lines. He said his boy knew of a path through the woods—a cow-path, starting some distance back, and he thought they could get out through all right.

I succeeded to following their lead. We turned back, going slow that the boy might find the path, which he soon did—the worst one I ever saw, and I had been all through the Rickles, finding ravages to compare with that cow-path in Western Tennessee.

We traveled nearly six—I in the rear. After three or four miles we came to a stream. We could not see what it was, but I knew by its noise that it was quite a river. The boy said it was ordinarily a small creek, but gave was swollen by recent rains. He did not like to cross first, as he could not swim. I was too anxious to proceed to stand upon ceremony, so I pushed forward. The stream was not over twenty feet wide, but deep and rapid. I was carried down some distance before I came to firm ground, giving my horse rein, and letting him pick his way.

In a few minutes he struck the path, and at a little distance further on we came to a traveled road. I heard dogs barking and other sign of life. It was a council of a 30-acre farm. I was now in plain sight of a house, and thought it best to ride by it at a little distance further on, so

Tobacco and Self-interest.

BY PRESIDENT JOHN BASCOM, D. D., LL. D.

There are few prevalent and accepted habits, we believe, more at war with a wise self-interest than that of the use of tobacco. We wish to present this relation in the present article, reserving the relation of this habit to spiritual defilement for a later use.

The very positive and unwholesome effects of tobacco on the human body are obvious, aside from all medical testimony on the subject, from the simple fact that it creates an intense, almost ungovernable, appetite. Such an appetite arises—as in the use of opium or of alcohol—from a decisive change in the tissues of the body,—a change of the nature of disease. It is not from a normal, but a very abnormal, condition that this insatiable craving springs. It discloses the unfortunate change which has been wrought in the physical system by tobacco,—a change of which every chewer and smoker has a most humiliating witness within himself. He need not go elsewhere for a proof of the very positive power of tobacco. A single chew's abstinence will be sufficient to assure him at once of the mischief making and tyrannical inmate he has received into the house hold of his appetites.

Such transformation cannot take place in the delicate human organism without altering the general tone of the body, endangering its health, limiting its capacity of pleasure, and greatly marring its productive power. We may be surprised that so vigorous an agent, and one so alien to nourishment, does no more mischief than it seems to do; but our surprise should be reduced by the fact that the mischief is often very obvious, and, when of a remote and obscure character, is often hidden rather than overcome.

The devils of weakness and disease which possess humanity are legion, and a goodly number of them find entrance by this appetite. No man can afford to reduce, by any indulgence, the tone of his physical system; and when such reduction is following from other causes, he cannot afford to hide it by the sedative effects of tobacco. If a man wishes to know where he is in physical resources, and to handle his physical powers with economy and wisdom, he must not confuse the whole problem by this habit.

A decided reduction of pleasure in a long life is almost sure to follow from this appetite. The appetite, once established, confers comparatively little enjoyment, but is sought as a relief from the discomfort which attends nervous exhaustion, or on denial. The man is driven forward by the inconvenience of abstinence far more than drawn onward by the pleasure of indulgence. The use of tobacco is completely opposed to that peaceful possession of one's appetites by which they bring many gratifications and demands none. The right relation to one's enjoyment is lost, and instead of holding them in easy subjection, he is held in subjection to them. This relation involves a loss of pleasure, just as certainly as of manhood. When the recognized limit of indulgence is reached, the cutting edge of discomfort is partially removed; but if even a brief denial is put, by intention or by accident, on the appetite, it becomes at once restless and clamorous.

Other, better, and more enjoyable pleasures are sacrificed to this enjoyment. All pleasures are not open to us; we must choose among them. He who chooses tobacco as his after-dinner indulgence leaves behind him the more delicate appreciation of food, and the more varied and wholesome gratification of fruits which belong to a perfectly healthy appetite. Strong stimulants, in securing their own pleasure, take away the power of a much wider, more discriminating, and more healthful use of the pleasures of the palate. One cannot say positively where the line of highest enjoyment is found; but when one chooses tobacco as his solace, he has slipped into the snare of a seductive, fallen angel, who will drive from him many wiser, better, and more gentle spirits,—who would have sought his permanent delight in many delicate ways.

Democratic State Convention.

The Democratic state Convention to nominate candidates for State officers, and for the transaction of such other business as may come before the convention, will be held in Redmond's Opera House, at the City of Grand Rapids, on Wednesday, August 29, 1888,

AT 11 O'CLOCK A. M.

Each county is entitled to one delegate for each twenty-one for the vote at the last gubernatorial election, and one for every fraction of not less than 250 votes. Every organized county is entitled to at least two delegates, and under the rules adopted a delegate must be a resident of the county he represents.

JOHN J. ENRIGHT, Chairman.

H. F. PENNINGTON, Secretary.

Charlevoix county is entitled to four delegates.

Organize.

Both the democratic and greenback state conventions have been called to meet in Grand Rapids August 18, and that there will be an honorable alliance formed, as has been the case in the past, there is, we think, little doubt. In view of this and as preparatory to a successful prosecution of the campaign, all of the forces in opposition to the republican party should begin to organize and get into shape for business. There ought to become or more democratic and national clubs organized in every town in the county; and not only in this county but in all the counties in this region.

Where it can be done satisfactorily it may be for best to unite in the formation of these clubs; but when it cannot, then let each branch of the opposition perfect an organization of its own. The main thing is to get in shape to work together for the advancement of a common cause.

All understand that the g. c. p. has always been in the ascendency in this part of the State—that they have the money and men at their disposal to prosecute a campaign—and that in fighting the republicans here the opposition has always had to contend against fearful odds. But truth and right will finally prevail over falsehood and wrong, and hence the Democrats and nationals of the Grand Traverse region should take courage, organize and gird on their armor and go out to do battle for their principles.

And the outlook is very encouraging; the political skies of Michigan are growing brighter; and the prospect of a complete overthrow of the party of monopoly and high taxation in this state in November next is a certainty if we go into the fight with that earnestness that ought to characterize the efforts of every lover of equal rights and exact justice for all.

The Michigan Club, with its $5 admission fee, is the weapon of our political enemies, and with the money thus obtained they hope to buy votes. We believe they will fail. The great mass of the people will not sell their franchise—they are not in the market, therefore we can go to them and appeal to their judgment and good sense in behalf of our principles with a firm faith that we shall win.—Eagle.

Cleveland and the Pensions.

To understand the special or private pension legislation which certain congressmen are now attempting to make capital out of it is necessary to know that this congress has passed more bills of that kind, twice over than any other, and that many of the proposed beneficiaries are persons whose claims have been rejected by republican commissioners of pensions—as well as by General Black, the present incumbent. Of the six hundred and more bills of this description passed this year Mr. Cleveland has vetoed about one hundred. The others have been approved and now are laws.

The bills vetoed may be divided into three classes: First, those placing on the pension rolls persons whose cases are still pending in the bureau and who are likely to get full justice from them; secondly, those in favor of persons whose claims have been rejected by the pension bureau for lacking any proof of their worthiness, and third, those of notorious frauds, bounty-jumpers and deserters who by reason of political influence have been able to secure favorable action in congress on claims which could not be considered for a moment in the bureau.

When it is remembered that this species of legislation is apt to be vicious in the majority of cases, and that in many states it is absolutely prohibited by constitutional provisions, the fact that the president has vetoed so much about five hundred special pension bills proves that he has given the applicants the benefit of the doubt wherever it has been possible to do so. The reasons assigned in his vetoes are a sufficient warrant for such adverse action in each case.

Under the many and very generous pension laws of the country it may be set down as reasonably certain that the great majority of the persons who cannot establish their claim to a pension before the bureau do not deserve such recognition. The pension machinery was not constructed to facilitate the efforts of adventurers to help themselves on the treasury, nor is it the province of congress to encourage fraud by specially singling out those rejected claimants and placing them in the company of the deserving recipients of the nation's grateful bounty. Mr. Cleveland's manly stand against this abuse must be ungratifying to old soldiers and honest pensioners as it is to the people at large who hate extravagance and delusive munificence and independence in high places.—Chicago Herald.

Paying the Confederate Bonds.

The following from the pen of Hon. John W. Daniel, United States senator-elect from Virginia, may instruct some very timid people, who may honestly entertain a fear that there is a possibility that the confederate bonds may be paid:

"The proposition brought forward for the holders of confederate bonds that the government is bound or ought to pay these bonds, is as palpable and encumbrance as absurdity as the freedom wit of man can invent. In the first place the amendment to the federal constitution forbids it, and that alone disposes of the question. In the second place, the theory of the war was that the confederate states had no legal existence. The victors in the war would as soon think of reviving the confederacy as of paying its debts, and the men who were confederates are as little disposed as their former foes to pay them. In the fourth place, there is no law, no equity, no principle of honor, and no reason of expediency to suggest that the United States or that anybody should pay the confederate debt. The confederate bond at least such as I have seen—expressed this on their face, being payable at a specified time "after a treaty of peace between the Confederate States and the United States of America." That treaty never took place. The bonds by their terms are not yet due, and will never be due. But, apart from all this, the United States has already made Georgia pay the Alabama claims, based on pretensions that negative the idea that the government will ever pay a debt contracted to fight it. It is an idle waste of time to discuss this question, and minds to which the proposition made is not an arrant absurdity would never understand the arguments presented. Evidently speculators and jobbers are trying to make a turn in confederate bonds, and evidently also only the ignorant and mawny will be caught by such chaff as is thrown before them.

Fraudulent Pensions.

Intelligent soldiers will find no fault with the President's action in vetoing objectionable pension bills. Already during this Congress 500 bills have passed, giving pensions to parties who could not prove their cases before the proper bureau of pensions. The government should be not only liberal but generous in granting aid to our national defenders, but those soldiers who are entitled to pensions are interested, the same as all of us, in preventing raids upon the treasury to pay bogus and improper claims. The very ability of the government to pay honest pensions may depend upon its care in shutting the door against dishonest ones.—Pentwater Herald.

Randall's Scheme.

In order to keep up the present tariff, the sole benefit of which seems to the interest of a few score owners, Sam Randall would take off the tax on tobacco, a luxury which the tax does not affect in the slightest degree, making this the only country on the face of the globe that does not draw a big revenue from this luxury. It would not cheapen tobacco to any appreciable extent, and would simply put millions into the pockets of tobacco manufacturers. But this is the whole scheme of Randall and other creatures of the monopolists. Next it will be whisky that will be made free; the gang would pawn their mangrel souls to serve their masters.

Support the Nation.

One of the most important offices to be filled this fall, indeed, so far the newspapers are concerned, the most important of all, is that of an Auditor General, and we wish to present for the favorable consideration of the press and readers the name of a sterling young democrat, Philip B. Wachtel, of Petoskey, Cheboygan Democrat.

The Cheboygan Democrat does well in nominating that sterling young democrat, Philip B. Wachtel, of Petoskey, for auditor general. That section of the state that deserves recognition could not be more meritoriously greeted.—Kalamazoo Gazette.

Frank M. Aiusham has taken possession of and is now running the United States hotel at Boyne City.

NOTES AND NEWS.

The Cheboygan Democrat closes a paragraph on the extravagance in national financial management as follows: "It would be better for the people of the United States to-day if every dollar of revenue was raised by direct taxation, for then they would watch the men who distribute the money, and they would not pay more than half what they do now for the support of the government. Still it would be impossible to convince the people of the truth of this statement. They prefer to be robbed indirectly and have the money squandered in paying direct taxes."

Is the Allegan Tribune correct when it says: "The protectionist documents are getting their eyes opened at the duplicity of Cleveland, Manning & Co., and in 1888 will vote solidly for a protectionist republican for president." If the lines on the tariff reform issue are drawn as tightly in 1888 as to cause protectionist democrats to "vote solidly for a protectionist republican for president" then you will be pretty likely to see tariff reform republicans voting solidly for a tariff reform democrat for president. We truly hope that politics will be so shaped during the next two years that all the friends of equal taxation and commercial liberty will be found battling side by side in the campaign of 1888. In that event, there won't be enough left of the protectionists after the election to know what struck them.—Lansing Journal

If that part of Michigan known as the Michigan legislature could see the Agricultural College at this season of the year, its beautiful lawn, its well clad, well fed and intelligent looking students, its thorough going practical, painstaking faculty, from president down to the superintendent of the farm, its general air of thrift, wholesomeness and usefulness, it would not hesitate an instant in granting the institution such sums of money as might be consided necessary to carry on thoroughly the broadest anticipations of its inceptors. The Agricultural College, in its entirety, is to day the handsomest spot in the state; it is the paradise of this beautiful peninsula, and is well worthy of the deepest solicitude of those who have its development and future prosperity in hand.—Lansing Republican.

John Kelly thought Tilden too old and frail to run a second time as president. John Kelly is dead. The stalwart Chandler wrested the presidency from Tilden; Chandler is dead. Grant, it is said, would have accepted and supported Tilden if he had attempted to claim the office he had been elected to. Grant is dead. Hancock was chosen as a more likely man to live through the presidency than Tilden. Hancock is dead. Hendricks seemed to have a long life ahead of him as compared with the man at the head of the ticket. Hendricks is dead. Seymour, McClellan, all the old candidates, are dead. Meanwhile Tilden thinks there is nothing so invigorating as working a cross bow before the mast in his yacht.—Jacksonville Herald.

Muskegon News: There are a number of republican papers in this much congressional district who honestly prefer the nomination of some other republican for congress than Cutcheon this fall. Yet they dare not come out and say so, and are afraid of the machine managed by the present incumbent.

Not New Taxes But Fewer Taxes.

It may be tariff revision to select an object of importation from which revenue is derived and put a prohibitory duty upon it; but it is not tax reduction. If the people are not to be benefited by tariff revision they don't want tariff revision. They wish to get rid of taxes instead of having new taxes laid upon them.—Philadelphia Record.

A Marshall man sent a dollar for a lightning potato bug killer which he saw advertised in a paper. Remove bug and proceed as before."

The Harbor Springs Independent says: Nearly all the cottages at the Charlevoix resort are open and even without the hotel there will be an immense crowd there.... Every seat, and nearly every foot of standing room, was filled at the congregational church Sabbath morning, to listen to the address to boys and girls by J. S. Smithson, and many went away because they could not get seats. The discourse covered those points of christian work easily understood by children, and could not fail to draw the child closer to the church in every respect. The music was furnished by the Sabbath school, with orchestra accompaniment, as announced last week.

Nine times out of ten when society is shocked at the terrible bad taste of some petted darling of aristocracy in marrying a coachman, hostler, or hired man, it is not the girl's fault at all. She has been so carefully watched that she could no get acquainted with any male biped of her own station, and don't know any better than to freeze on the first thing in pants that comes along. Girls who are allowed to mingle with young men of their own station in life very seldom get imshed on course, vulgar men.

Traverse Eagle: The rapidity with which a lie travels is well illustrated by the way the false statement published in the Michigan tradesman of the sale of Hannah, Lay & Co.'s pine lands, and representing it to be but the beginning of the disposal of all the interests of the Company in Traverse City, is traveling about the country. The statement was promptly corrected by both the Eagle and Herald, of this place, but, notwithstanding this, the Tradesman's yarn is still being copied by our exchanges. Even the Charlevoix Sentinel, which ought to know better, copies the article without comment.

The C. & W. M. railroad have made arrangements with Dexter & Noble of Fife Rapids, to run his new iron steamer, "Queen of the Lakes," between Holland and Manistee. They have been inconvenienced heretofore by not having control of any steamer which they could depend on. The "Queen of the Lakes" is one of the finest excursion steamers on the lakes. Her width is 30 feet and its length is 107 feet. It has a seating capacity of 400 and cost $22,000. Mr. Noble started yesterday from Elk Rapids and will reach Ottawa beach this afternoon. It will be a great improvement on their old arrangement, as they will have entire control of the new steamer.—G. R. Democrat.

Another Pioneer Come to Rest.

Medad Thompson died July 12th, at 11:30 p. m., at the age of 86 years, 3 months and 20 days.

In 1859 went to Colorado, was there two years. Returned to his home in Iowa, and then removed to Charlevoix, Mich., in 1864, where he has since lived. Has raised a family of eight children, six of whom are now living in Charlevoix county.

They All Say the Same.

A. F. Rouse, city attorney of Lansing, John A. Keck, justmaker at South Lansing, and Wm. Schultz, of the Michigan stave and barrel company, Lansing, took in Charlevoix and the Pine Lake region this week on a trip round the lakes. Like others before them, they are enthusiastic in their praise of the beauties and comforts of Charlevoix, and will make their arrangements to spend next year's vacation here.

A Fish Story.

Charlevoix, July 09.—Three "chaps" caught 501 trout on Jordan river last Thursday and a "high blood" from St. Louis, Mo., caught 230 pounds of bass in three hours in a small lake six miles from Charlevoix. This is no fish story.—Grand Rapids Democrat.

The County Seat Question.

Last Thursday afternoon the supreme court affirmed the action of the board of supervisors in the canvass of the vote of removal of the county seat, and Boyne City is laying.

A Warning.

Pain is given for the wise purpose of informing us of the presence of danger and disease. Any little confinement of an unusual nature disturbs the balance of the system, the nerves become over-excited, and, besides the numbered other disturbances are the result. Many of the miseries of men and women could might be cured and preserved were their approach heeded and resisted, having their origin in derangements of the liver and blood, dyspepsia, jaundice, indigestion, costiveness, and other troublesome conditions. Folks of a diseased nature find a certain cure in the use of Golden Seal Bitters. In this medicine, unassisted by art, has produced a rare combination of medicinal properties, wisely adapted to the cure of diseases common to mankind. The vacillating principals embodied in Golden Seal Bitters will assuredly cure the broken down dyspeptic. Sold by Perry Weed and Dr. G. W. Crooker.

LINES TO A FRIEND.

BY MARY P. SCHUYLER.

I know that we shall meet some day, somewhere;
It may be when we both are gray-haired
And youth has lost its charm—we shall not care.
Our hearts will need not have in that long, gray-haired
Yes, in some other clime—some other land.
I know that I shall clasp your warm, true hand.

It may be in the spring time, when the earth
Gives kindly welcome to the sun's bright
In springing grass and tender violets.
With robins trilling forth their pure, sweet lays:
I would not hope to meet you in the sleigh
Of wintry cares which bear the joys of life.

Or we may meet in summer, when the fields
Are rich with golden grain—when blooming
Flowers
And opening fruits shed their perfume on the air,
Alcidian breezes speed the swift-winged
Bear
Our time of meeting may be far away,
But still I know that we shall meet some day.

It may be in the autumn, when the trees
Have changed their airy hues to gold and Brown,
When nature, robbed of its verdure, seems to plead
For mercy, frost had slow, flickering down;
But though the year be dying, I know that sight,
We may yet meet in sorrow, joy and
Or we may meet in winter, when the earth
Is robed in heavy folds of purest white,
When Jack Frost has kissed every tree and flower,
Turning resplendent rays of changing light.
We may be gathered with our loved ones round
With heart-felt joy thinking life's storm-swept path.

Or we may meet in that bright world above,
Beyond death's valley, in that Athens where Loved and long regretted—loved one restored
To—mother, sweet, yearnings—so unanswered prayer.
Ah, yes, dear friend, I know we shall meet there,
And we may meet on earth some day—somewhere.

A PLUCKY GIRL.

BY CAPTAIN JAMES MONTFORD.

"Relate your experience as a prisoner, Colonel," said the worthy's wife, as he declined his inability to furnish a story for their evening.

"You have already heard that, which is no adventure of mine, by the way, or at least I played a very unimportant part."

"It so long since I heard it that the circumstance has escaped my memory," returned the lady.

The Colonel acquiesced and said:

"It is a pretty story enough; but the heroine did not consider me in the least. I can promise you. Did you never think how seldom an adventure crosses the path of a deserted man? They are other shot dead, and there is nothing to tell, or—

"Perhaps the actors keep the story to themselves," I suggested, "for fear of more adventures at home."

"Well, I was a party in the affair, if not a participant, and the story is as follows:

"There was a young man, whom I will call Frank Tooke, in my regiment. He was the nephew of a farmer dwelling in Missouri near the place where I was located at that time.

"Frank had entered the service without his uncle's consent, and, indeed, against his inclination; for the old gentleman had the image in the contrary direction.

"His distaste was not so strong, however, but that he invited the corps—tribe to accompany Frank to the farm-house to tea.

"I refused twice or thrice; but as the farmer continued his solicitations, I at last signified a day, and accompanied by Frank, rode over to the farmer's house.

"We were well received, and everything done to make our visit pleasant; but as it contains nothing remarkable I shall pass it.

"But one object of my observation was the young woman who displayed so much energy a few hours later.

"She was the daughter of a neighbor, and as I was expected from several glasses I witnessed between Frank and herself, she had been invited by Mr. Tooke's daughter to meet their country.

"She was a pretty girl, with dark hair and eyes, bright and, good-natured. As I sat alone with Frank for a few minutes just after dinner, he told me all about her, and something that created in me a little above the rank—for war has promoted it.

"So far the visit was fair as could be desired; but misfortune was gathering, and storm after night set in it downcast.

"It was a warm evening, and in the window of the sitting-room, opening out upon a long veranda, had been raised to admit the air.

"We were seated quietly, listening, I believe, to the memory of Frank's affections while she played a rollicking war tune upon the antiquated organ, when I happened to turn toward the windows, and saw a sight that brought me upon my feet immediately.

"A large, bearded man stood upon the veranda looking into the room. He held a long rifle in his hands, and as I rose presented it at my head.

"'No resistance,' he said, harshly, and stepping in through the window, was followed by half a dozen men.

"All was excitement and alarm. The women screamed, and old Mr. Tooke swore, but it was all of no use.

"I had been warned before coming to the farm house that a detachment of Hilderand's bushwhackers were lurking in the neighborhood, and I at once concluded that I had fallen into their power.

"They had surrounded the house, and escape was impossible. Frank and myself were soon bound to our chairs at the mercy of the rascals.

"They did not attempt to plunder the house. Perhaps they had some respect for Mr. Tooke's principles, but nothing he could say prevailed upon the fellows to release their prisoners.

"I heard that after the first burst of excitement was over Miss Hindy, Frank's betrothed, seemed to become strangely composed.

"She whispered a few words in the ear of Mr. Tooke, and then left the room.

"The old man came up to the leader of the gang and invited him to partake of a cold collation and some liquor he had that very morning.

"The offer was accepted at once, and the outlaws were very merry for half an hour—so long as the liquor lasted—but they were careful to have a guard upon us, and no opportunity presented itself for escape.

"At last they prepared to leave the house, and we were led into the yard and mounted upon a pair of poor horses behind two powerful ruffians.

"The band rode off at a good pace, which was kept up until we arrived at a thick wood upon the bank of a river, five miles from Mr. Tooke's residence.

"This seemed to be the rendezvous of the gang, for fires were smouldering and a few gaunt animals were scattered about upon the ground.

"Dismounting, the horses were picketed, and the marauders prepared to turn in for the night.

"Blankets were furnished us, but we were not in a condition to count sleep with any success.

"Mercy was an attribute to be expected from the gang only as long as it suited their inclinations; they were liable to drop its exercise at a beard alarm.

"Guards were set around the camp, and soon all was quiet.

"An hour or more dragged away. You may imagine how pleasant I felt with the prospect of meeting a miserable death in the morning.

"Desperate was certain at least, for I would be carried away into the mountains, far off from my command. The prospect of no lease was small, for there was no exchange of prisoners with the guerrilla band.

"But suddenly I heard a slight noise at my side. We lay at the foot of a tree, wrapped in our blankets, side by side. By the smoldering light of the fire I saw a hand upper from behind the tree.

"It rested upon Frank's shoulder, while a voice said

"'Be quiet—help is near.'

"The young fellow started violently, his lips parted, and I feared he would alarm the foes.

"But he choked back his astonishment, and soon recognized the speaker as Miss Hindy.

"'Are your hands free?' she asked in a whisper.

"'No,' returned Frank in the same tone.

"'Be cautious! cautious!' Toward and secured the bands. I was soon afterward released.

"'The fellow is upon the other side of the camp, upon the ground; I believe he is asleep.'

"'But she is with you?' asked Frank; 'you did not come alone.'

"'A negro servant is all. I have horses, though, just about clip away.'

"We rose up carefully from the ground, and slipped away after Miss Hindy, who led the way toward the horses.

"As we reached the place where they stood, the young woman gave an exclamation of startled surprise, and turned back quickly.

"'There's the sentinel,' she whispered. 'Looking forward, I saw the shadow of a tall man but a few feet distant.

"He was coming directly toward us, and, as his eyes were fastened upon me, I knew my presence had been discovered.

"Determined to resist recapture, I moved forward.

"He mistook me for one of his comrades probably, for he came directly up to me without a word.

"I knew that I would be recognized immediately, and resolved to take advantage of the mistake to secure my liberty.

"As he came within reach I sprang upon him and seized his throat.

"He gave a yell of surprise and fear; but Frank came to my assistance and the ruffian was soon silenced.

"But his yell had aroused the camp, and we heard the outlaws rushing to their weapons and answer the sentinel with wild cries.

"'Come on, my girl!' Miss Hindy, running forward toward the point where the horses were concealed.

"We soon came upon a negro who held three horses, and an instant later were in the saddle.

"As we galloped out of the woods the bushwhackers were at our heels.

"The horses we rode were poor, and, as we was double loaded, escape would have been impossible had it not been for the fortunate arrival of a number of soldiers from the camp.

"The bushwhackers at once ran off at the appearance of re-enforcements, and we saw them no more.

"Half an hour later we reached Mr. Tooke's farmhouse, when Miss Hindy gave the following account of her good deed.

"When she saw her lover captured by the ruffians, she had hurried to the negro quarters, and dispatched a boy to the camp for aid.

"This was a good move, as the bushwhackers could not have been surprised, but the girl was plucky, and as she was the young negro's pet she had gone with their prisoners, she, with the aid of a negro, equipped the steeds, and followed upon his trail.

"The remainder had been accomplished by her alone. For the generous nature of the men, and were off Italian songs.

"But it is not every young woman nowadays that would display so much resolution and courage."—Chicago Ledger.

The City of Los Angeles.

The city of Los Angeles, the commercial center and largest municipality of Southern California, is a curiosity; or, rather, it is made up of numerous curiosities, such as are not found in any portion of the United States but the Pacific coast. The city contains a population of fully 35,000 persons, and the number is steadily increasing. This number includes about 1,000 Chinamen, nearly all of whom live in that portion of the city known as Chinatown. Their habitations (can hardly call them houses) are in a cluster, near the center of the corporate limits, but north of the business center. Their stores, shops, stores, customers, habits, etc., are as unlike those of the American people as can well be imagined, and the visitor who gets inside of these quarters and comes in contact with the curious things to be seen and heard, finds it difficult to realize that he is not in China instead of the United States. My own observations in Chinatown will form a portion of a future sketch.

The population of the city also includes a liberal sprinkling of Mexicans, most of whom live here long before the town grew to be anything more than an old-fashioned, uncouth, and almost unknown trading post and rendezvous for freebooters. There, like the other denizens of the new thriving city, are, as a rule, quiet, orderly, well-behaved people. In fact, I have never been in any city of equal size where there was less drunkenness, swagger, or any other unseeing element of any kind than Los Angeles.

The location of the city is as beautiful and picturesque as one could wish to see. It is in the richest portion of the Los Angeles Valley, with the Pacific Ocean on the west and south, distant sixteen to twenty miles. From the grand old ocean come cool, gentle, and refreshing breezes all through the summer months, when they are most needed. These breezes come as regularly as the days, usually rising about ten or eleven o'clock in the morning and continuing till evening. Thus is the intense heat of the sun at mid-day made tolerable, and the nights are so cool that sleeping under at least one blanket is a luxury which everybody can enjoy. I never slept so soundly and restfully anywhere else, in all my peregrinations, as I do near the Pacific coast with the glorious sea-breezes fanning me all night long.

On the west and north are the Sierra Madre and the Santa Bernardino Mountains and their foothills. These elevations present an almost unlimited variety of shapes and outlines. The nearest one, lies within a mile of the city limits, and some of its higher peaks are not more than three or four miles further away. In the after part of the day, when the sun is dipping down into the ocean, the hills and mountains appear to be much nearer than they really are, and form an imposing wall of granite, as if built on purpose to shield the city from the vast world lying to the east and north of it. Some of these foothills reach around into what are now residence portions of the town, and by a view to be had from any one of them elevations is picturesque and lovely beyond description. In all my travels I have never before, up to the hour of this writing, beheld anything of the kind so beautiful.

The business men and property owners of Southern California are both lucky and shrewd. They are lucky in being in a country whose climate is superb, pleasant, invigorating, and healthful beyond the power of exaggeration. They are shrewd enough to take advantage of the fact and utilize it for business purposes.

The Pacific coast region has a monopoly of about all the good, healthful, reliable, and desirable climates to be found in the United States, and the Californians know it. They know, also, that the people of the regions east of the Rocky Mountains are every year becoming more disgusted with the cold and blizzards of winter and the heat, cyclones, thunderstorms and sudden changes of spring and summer, and they are turning their thoughts and faces toward the Pacific coast as a region where such objectionable meteorological conditions are unknown. They are doing all this forward regions by hundreds and thousands, some intending to remain only a portion of the year, and many others with a purpose to make investments and establish homes for themselves and families. All these new comers are heartily welcomed by residents of the country—especially by realestate agents, hotel keepers, and proprietors of "rooms to let." Thus does the man who is already established on the ground profit by fresh arrivals. The tide of immigration keeps business lively, and there is little or no complaint of "hard times" in California. Visitors and new settlers are sure to be pleased with what accommodations they meet with. They can find a place for a close lot or town lots; and in a variety of ways their wants can be satisfied. Even the business man or property owner smiles a sweet, happy, satisfied smile whenever he learns that a new invoice of strangers has arrived from the East.—Ralph E. Weber.

Wages and Living in Egypt.

D. N. Richardson, editor of the Deseret Deseretal, writes from Cairo, Egypt, relative to the pay and living of the laboring class in that region. He says: "The laboring class, when there is just at this time so much unemployed among the laboring classes. All the embankments should be built the Nile in check, all railroad filling, and all work of the kind is carried on—as done with human hands, children and women carrying the dirt in little baskets on their heads. Horses and carts might be used, but then what would the laboring people do to get their bread? It is a crusts a day, which goes to buy their skin tunic and and dirty shirt? To clothe those people costs a dollar or two a year. To feed them, say 5 cents, perhaps, a day—but that is rather high. The stuff they eat—some greens, a very little coarse bread, and a little onion to chew, make up the measure of their daily food.

"I think this state of things severe, but have you never thought in comparison with the prospects and pay of our time will come when America will be over-populated, when wages will fall off, and land get very dear, and people will fare no better than these I'm talking of? To be was densely populated as this land is, Iowa should have 720,000,000 of people, instead of the 1,750,000 that she now has. Figure on that awhile and you will find no space for wages beyond what is paid here; nothing but hats to live in and the cheapest, coarsest sort of food.

Too Much Hard Work.

If anybody doubts that farmers have to work hard to get ahead, let him look at the number of broken-down, dyspeptic farmers' wives, barely turned of forty, that you see at State and county fairs. The farmer cannot hide his hard work as easily as the mechanic can. But it is a smart, industrious, sober, energetic farmer that can make his farm pay 6 per cent. in New England. Hundreds of sturdy farmers in Vermont make less than this of their farms, and too many of them are tortured to death by the effort to do so. Why, for a farm that have bought, with a mortgage attached. It is be true that the farming class contributes largely to the insane, it is not because they are brooders over the life, it seems, but because they have to carry more anxieties and troubles, with less time for relaxation, than the other great working class of intelligence.—Popular Science News.

The Future of Society.

It has character to the writer to read recently a number of memoirs, biographies, and sketches, all intended to describe "society" in its technical sense—the upper society, that is, of great capitals, the large group of more or less idle persons which in every European country has drawn together round the centers of affairs, to amuse, enlightenment, or conspicuous person, has called itself and thought itself "the world," has given laws to manners and greatly influenced morals, and in all ages has attracted to itself for no obvious reason an exceptional attention and regard. It is not an interesting study, except for an object, and one is ever startled to see how little variety it presents; but it is impossible to read such accounts without noticing that "society," in its limited sense, though without demonstrable raison d'etre, is apparently indestructible, or wondering whether, if indestructible, as time advances, grows worse or better. The class you study European history the more certain are you to find a limited yet large circle which surrounds the center of power, which claims for itself most of the pleasures of life and services from which the millions around regard with admiration, or envy, occasionally with rage hatred, but which itself does little or nothing to draw to itself that exceptional attention. It goes on and continues to be, floating at the top, apparently without effort, and though rapidly fluctuating in its components, still sorted by the presence of the constituents, such as the Queen of Spain, which hardly change. It is always frivolous, always attentive to ceremony, always more or less vicious, and always in receipt of fresh supplies of cash, which it uses profusely; yet it does not pass away. You find it as powerful round Charles the Bold, or Philip II., or Henri Quatre, as around Louis XV., or Napoleon III.; its marked in the time of Charles II., as of Queen Victoria; and allowing the difference of manners, always exhibiting the same characteristics. All within it are seeking distraction; all are self-effaced and in a way lawless; all are self-indulgent; and all, as a body, seek money.

This is true not only of today whole Berlin, Vienna, Paris and London, all notice the money greed of "society," the intrusion into it because they bring the money of vulgar lions, the taint of sinking which should be saved the real and most of its factitious eminences; but all that is very old. Legacy-hunting was a trade with the Roman aristocracy; society in the middle ages lingered for grants of land, benefices appanages, and court pensions; the Italian society of the Renaissance courted farmers-general as the French society of M. Grevy courts German and Levantine Jews, and centuries were computed for by courtiers

AS he sat on the bench of home rule for Ireland, Mr. Henpeck? "indeed I am, and if my vote would secure it Ireland would have a monopoly of it." "How do you mean, sir?" "Why, I mean that as far as I am concerned Ireland is so entirely welcome to home rule that I would skip her at once, if I could, the sample of it that my wife has introduced and manages to draw me toward the door. "Go away" said the lady, "go and find Nellie." "Do my best in the shining." A few minutes afterward the mother went to look for her little daughter, who had been playing alone on the floor, a large fire that her clothes were scorched. They would have blazed had it not been for the dog who had crouched down between her and the fire, taking care to protect her well. Marks on the child's clothing showed that the dog had tried to drag her out of danger. When he failed he interposed his own body, and the mother found him in a state of exhaustion while the hair was being singed from his back. The child was still sleeping peacefully. If a dog, without any soul, can be so loving and self-sacrificing, what should we expect from little children who have been trained in the Christian faith and family worship.

The Physiology of the Liver.

The liver is the largest secreting organ in the human body, and the bile which it secretes is more intimately connected with the general health than any other of the secretions. Upon the proper character and quantity of the bile, depends largely the healthy condition of the liver. If there is an unhealthy source of relief from liver complaint, namely, Hostetter's celebrated Stomach Bitters, which for over a quarter of a century has been achieving thousands cures of the above-mentioned ailments, fever and ague, dyspepsia, constipation, rheumatism, kidney affection, and disorders incidental to, or accompanying, the period of pregnancy. Nervousness is a common complaint among persons in those parts of the country where that elixir occurs in abundance, and a remedy adapted to the combined requirements of families, it is supremely desirable, and as a means of invigorating a debilitated system, it is thoroughly to be depended upon.

Roskin as a Soulber.

Mr. Roskin certainly cannot be accused of treating his friends and correspondents very graciously. He has written to inform them that he must decline correspondence in the spring, as he prefers spending such days as may be spared to him in the fields instead of his desk. If were one of these "friends and correspondents" I should, by all means, allow him to enjoy his "reel" to the full, and, at the same time, not only pardon his declining correspondence in the spring, but would allow him to take the same course in the summer, autumn, and winter. If the people will turn and cringe to such "illustrious" egotists, they cannot expect to be pitied when they receive an occasional disagreeable snub.—London Truth.

Remarkable Escape.

John Kohn, of Lafayette, Ind., had a very narrow escape from death. This is his own story: "One year ago I was in the last stage of Consumption. Our best physicians gave my case up. I finally got so low that our doctor said I could live twenty-four hours. My friend then purchased a bottle of DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS, which benefited me. I continued until I am as perfect health, having used no other medicine."

Why Is It

That rheumatism and neuralgia are so prevalent? This question has not been satisfactorily answered, but it is certain that these diseases are not only the most painful and annoying of all maladies, but some member of nearly every family in the land is the victim of one of these dread diseases. Ladies seem to be particularly liable to neuralgic attacks, which, in the form of neuralgic headache, pain in the back, or nervous pains, are of constant occurrence, particularly at this season of the year. Not until the discovery of Athlophoros had any remedy been found for either rheumatism, neuralgia or nervous headaches, and they were generally conceded to be incurable, but Athlophoros has been proved to be not only a certain cure for both diseases, but a speedy one, and, what is more, it does not leave the system in a worse condition than it was before the attack, but, if the disease is not cured and dead—drunk.

Parable of the Burglar.

A burglar was going through a house in a Dakota town one night and discovered an enormously large coil of money. Curious to know whether he had broken into an editor's home or that of a somewhat variety of capitalist he turned to the owner who had just awakened and said:

"Lease me, Colonel, but I would like to inquire how you earn your salary on an unusually large wad of wealth."

"Sir!" replied the moneyed man, "I am a member of the Territorial Legislature."

"A thousand pardons" exclaimed the polite burglar, dropping the money, "Shake! We never steal from members of the legislature. Good-night."—Bellefine Bell.

A Washington Crank.

One of the characters of Washington is a young fellow who pads his clothing so as to make him seem to be nearly twice as large as he is. His clothes are always neat, but as he wears them he looks more like a stuffed man than a real one. He wears a pair of boots with heels fully four inches high. His coat sleeves are so long that they cover the tips of his fingers, and even beyond that he has a pair of enormous cuffs. This young man is the only child of his parents, and is generally regarded as being a trifle daft. One of his peculiarities is a love for his own figure. He thinks he is the handsomest man alive. He rents an office in an up-town building to which no one save only a favored few are admitted. This room he has arranged so that the walls and ceiling are entirely covered with mirrors. Strange stories are told of the young man's actions in this apartment. It is said he will remain there for hours together, standing in the middle of the glass, all the while cutting up the most extraordinary antics. On the street he never looks to the right nor to the left. He never speaks to any one unless first addressed. Several times he has been gazed by young fellows who thought they would have a lark at his expense. In each and every instance they have been soundly thrashed, for he is one of the most expert and scientific sparrers in the city. This man is one of Washington's most notable oddities.—Philadelphia Call.

Tobacco and Self-interest.

BY PRESIDENT JOHN NEWSOM, D. D., LL. D. Monmouth.

It is an unsocial habit. In a limited way, in the form of smoking, it is social; but even then it is narrowly elective of those of like habits, and comes in to reduce the mental tone and station the circle of feeding. The indulgence, as more or less offensive, repels many, and the persons repelled are those of a more refined and inspiring temper. The habit is exclusive and narrow in its social and physical relations.

The use of tobacco puts a serious obstacle in the way of the success of a young man. There is no employment to which it recommends him; there are many employments in connection with which it is a formidable or a fatal difficulty. The use of tobacco is rarely, indeed, a presenting cause in favor of a young man with anybody, while in many cases, even with those who themselves use it, its use is a decisive objection, when any position of delicate trust is under consideration. It lowers, both directly and by association, in very many minds, the sense of soundness and strength which they wish to connect with a young man whom they are to encounter constantly in important relations.

Rarely, indeed, would any man, himself addicted to a temperate use of tobacco, recommend the habit as a wise and grateful one to a young man whom he was interested. How many fathers would give this counsel to sons? How very many, on the other hand, out of their own experience, would give with great urgency the opposite advice? A man of good judgment, having reached mature years without the habit, very rarely takes it up. It is fastened on boys and young men in that period of credulous and generous in which they are anticipating the vices of their elders for their virtues, their errors for their excellences. A boy once gotten beyond this surge age, so strictly of moral contrasts, without the habit, finds nothing in it to appeal to his growing judgment and experience.

The expense of this habit is an important and uncompensated burden on any young man. A wise economy is a universal condition of success. Here is an economy large enough to be in itself of considerable importance; one which in no way interferes with progress and self-improvement; and one which tends to remove the temptations to indolence and wastefulness in many directions.

The funds which a young man adds to the use of tobacco devotes to thrift, are quite sufficient if his position wants to reduce seriously his chances of success in business; while the form of expenditure will often anticipate for him very desirable outlays for social and intellectual improvement. He often chooses between his own habit, with its unfavorable associations, and a large variety of truly valuable attainments in life, and at a much lighter rate.

With workingmen, this habit is especially unfortunate, as narrowing means of means; making more gross, grovelling desires; restricting ambition, and concentrating on personal indulgence the resources of the entire household. If an angel of hope and prosperity shall ever descend on the home of the poor, one of the first things she will drive out, will be tobacco, which deadens all the incentives of life, and consumes its resources in utter waste. We certainly do not envy the poor their pleasures, we only regret that they are of so unproductive a character.—University of Wisconsin.

Chronicles from Wilson.

It came to pass in the days of Grover, the king, in the second year of his reign that a seribe thought of the doings of the citizens of Wilson, and as he thought thereof, resolved to make them for the edification of the inhabitants thereof, also for their children, yea, even their children's children.

It so happened in the month called June a man whose surname was called Hudkins being the supervisor of said province said unto his carpenters and builders: let us build a barn of great proportions, so the sound of the axe and the hammer was heard through the wilderness. So when the work was finished, he called together his kinsfolk and acquaintances to the number of fourscore or more so that the building was fitly finished together; so they did eat, drink, and was merry, for a barn of goodly proportions was raised.

Also, one Healey, of the same province has a fine building for the stalling of his kine, and for the storing of his grain, with a gigantic axe surmounting it which shows whether the wind lieth to the north-east or south west.

And it was so that in the month called July, on the 17th day of the month, that one Shepherd, a citizen of this province, who has been sojourning in the city called Traverse for many weeks for the restoration of mind and body, has returned in good health, and was warmly greeted by his kinsfolk, and acquaintances, his wife and little ones.

It came to pass in the sixth day of the week, that many of the friends of one Smith, did gather together at his house and make the night merry with music and dancing.

And it was so that when one of the young men did see fit to take unto himself a wife that his acquaintances did gather together with horns and instruments of music (?) to greet him, but after the assembly was gathered, they looked for the bridegroom, and lo, he was not there, for he and the bride had gone, they knew not whither, so they returned home with sadened hearts.

Also in this province, it so happened that one widow woman did propose she set her husband, who was dead (?) and whom she saw the apparition of, in the wilderness until she became exhausted; her robes being torn and her sandals became rags on her feet, but it was not him or his ghost.

One man named Vance who built a mill here last year is now sawing out lumber and having it away to the village called East Jordan. Also one Empey, of the latter place is getting out much bark in this region which is sensible for the far off lands. EZRA, THE SCRIBE.

East Jordan.

The board of directors of the Charlevoix county agricultural society will hold a meeting at the town hall in East Jordan on Friday next, at one p. m., for the purpose of completing arrangements for their annual exhibition. It is thought that a full and fair exhibit will be made of the board are as follows, and the time for which they are elected:

For three years.—Robert Trimble, Norwood; Nathan L. Cash, Eveline; Joseph H. Dunn, Charlevoix; Alonzo J. Stroud, Evangeline.

For two years.—Wm. H. Healey, South Arm; Wm. F. Empey, South Arm; Joseph C. Gleim, South Arm; Wm. Means, Boyne Valley.

For one year.—Hiram B. Hipp, South Arm; Orlando Blair, South Arm; Marion Hudkins, Wilson; John F. Darrah, Melrose.

President, John Nicholls, Charlevoix; Secretary, Hon. H. Stone, East Jordan; Treasurer, James B. Palmiter, East Jordan.

On Monday evening last a meeting was held for the purpose of organizing a driving park association. The officers elected were M. M. Burnham, president; and Jos. H. Stone, secretary. The meeting adjourned to meet again, on Thursday evening next at the Jordan River house, to complete the organization. It will be a sleek company. Grounds have been selected about half a mile south from the postoffice, and steps will be at once taken to grade and put a track in good order. Premiums will be offered for the agricultural society to hold their annual exhibition on the grounds. A good quantity of clay is near at hand with which to make an excellent track which will for the present be made a half mile track.

An Ugly City.

San Francisco is probably the ugliest city in the union, despite her beautiful surroundings, her ideal situation, her enchanting space view. Nature has supplied her with charms galore, but on her face the disfiguring hand of man has left heavy, hideous marks. Her architecture is a nightmare of gray and wooden horrors; her houses look bedaubed with dirt and dignity and are hobbled in gaunt, unpainted, ill-smelling fences. A rickety, slipper-rolling fence. A tall, wooden fence has its excuses even in rural districts, where it protects the gardens and gardens of its residents from the universal inconvenience of roving cattle, but it is many a year since I saw one, and some have been permitted to gamble about the San Francisco streets, and there is no end of serious nor beauty in the large, wooden structures which surround the lovely and spacious parks of every second house in San Francisco. Eastern cities have long since abandoned fences, except in some cases, where a low, hideous, iron railing is substituted, and one can ride along through the beautiful suburbs of Chicago, Cincinnati, Detroit, or Boston without seeing a fence of any description. There your grounds are separated from your neighbors only by a low, stone coping, and the lovely expanse of green and flowers stretches away indefinitely, unmarred by the painted excrescences which render our streets as hideous as the shadow of convent walls, which neither adorn nor defend, but unnecessarily conceal the really beautiful lawns which lie behind their aged backs.—San Francisco Post.

A Warning.

Pain is given for the wise purpose of informing us of the presence of danger and disease, any little excitement or unusual native distinctly the business of the system, the nervous energies are exhausted, and headache and a hundred other disturbances are the result. Many of the miseries of man and womankind might be cured and prevented were their apprehensive feeling heeded, heeding their details. Wreck of the Hercules.

We take the following concerning the wreck of the Hercules, (which we briefly noticed last week) from the Sheboygan Times, of July 17th: The scow Hercules, from Charlevoix, bark-laden for Milwaukee, capsized off North Point reef, this port, about 5 o'clock Wednesday morning, during a light wind and heavy sea. We got from Capt. G. E. Hoag, master of the vessel, the following particulars. He left Manistee Tuesday night with a northeast wind, which met long after freshened until it became very strong and he was obliged to shape his course almost directly for this shore, which he sighted at North Point about daylight. The wind was still strong and the sea high. When about one mile and a half miles off the point the scow suddenly sprang a large leak in the stern, which seemed to partially give way, and within ten minutes she filled and rolled over on her beams end, seemingly giving time for the men to get upon her side. Just as she began to go over Capt. Hoag was making fast a line to three or two of the barges near at hand, and was obliged to hurriedly climb up the rigging to save himself from being barn down and carried overboard by the falling deck load of lumber. The men at the wheel, Albert Hopkins, was covered up and forced partly into the water, but was enabled to pull himself up on to the vessel's side, as did the rest of the crew, but where they found it very difficult to maintain themselves, even with what little assistance they could render each other. The tug Sheboygan was neared the vessel, but the Minnie Karl got the first line communication with her and pulled all the crew on board, except Capt. Hoag who was the last to leave. He then jumped on board the Sheboygan, which came along side the bottom of the scow lying to the windward. During the effort to save the crew they came near being swept off the wreck into the lake by a line which passed partly over it. The scow would not be towed into the harbor without being righted, and she very soon drifted past and went ashore at the South Point, where she became a complete wreck, and was stripped Thursday by her crew, with the help of the crew of the Life Saving Station, and by the Jackson, under the direction of Capt. Hoag. An attempt will be made to tow the wreck to the beach south of the harbor.

The crew of the Hercules comprised the following persons, residents of Charlevoix Mich.: G. E. Hoag, captain; George Howe, mate; Chas. Arnold, steward; Herbert Hopkins and Frank Bennett, sailors. They saved nothing except what they had on when the wreck took place, the captain losing about $15 in money, and the mate a new suit of clothes and a gold watch. They extend their thanks for the kind assistance received here, in a card published in this paper."

The Sage of Greystone.

A great deal has been written as to the decrepitude of Samuel J. Tilden, writes a New York correspondent of the Albany Journal. The differences of judgment arise from disagreement as to how much the jaded state of head and hands implies. My own belief is that he is modern high as ill as he looks, and that the occlusion that he seeks is due to a dislike of being seen rather than to absolute inability. He lives up the Hudson at Greystone, but he makes visits to town much oftener than is generally known. His mansion is Gramercy place, with its jumbles of architecture, decoration, and contents, are not altogether neglected to the aged statesman. He rides from his country residence in a close carriage to the railroad station, slips quickly into a parlor car, and on arriving at the city takes a cab for his town premises, which are in a quarter quite fashionable but now aside from all bustle. His house fronts magnificently on Gramercy park, which is a high-fenced square private to the owners of the abutting property. In this inclosure I saw Mr. Tilden, the sixty-sixth day, walking leisurely to and f

Merchantile collections have notably improved at nearly all distributing centers. The demand for funds is active at New Orleans and Boston, where money has been tight and interest rates higher, and is increasing at Philadelphia and Pittsburgh, while it is easier at Baltimore, at Chicago and Kansas City. But the visible signs of the reported improvement are found in the hardening testimony in grain, pork, lard, wool, cotton, brown and bleached cottons, and print cloths, iron and steel are firm, and while the buyers are not likely to anticipate their needs, the tone of the market is firmer, but present immunity from advance is specially in sales, under cover of the advance in grain. Cotton is higher on both futures and unfavorable crop reports in the South Atlantic States. Wool remains firm at the previous advance, and manufacturers are not buying ahead of their needs. Cotton goods are firmer and irregular, and unsatisfactory as to prices for print cloths, the firm tone being due to combinations in the city goods trade.

FOREIGN.

J. E. Thevoid Rogers, the well-known author and Oxford professor, sent from Paris to newspaper correspondents the following letter in response to a request for his opinion in regard to the present aspect of the home-rule question:

The settlement of the question is inevitable, but the delay in pacification is unwelcome. The delay in settlement is due partly to an infringe of personality and partly to the dependence of the aristocratic whigs. The Irish have made a bid for Mr. Bright. His great and just reputation has discouraged them from proposing to place him in the chair, but they have had they have indicated to him in the wrong. Long and well acquainted with Ireland, I find in Ireland far less than beyond his dislike of the tactics of the Irish party. The House of Commons made, I think, a great error. That the home-rule policy will be carried I have no doubt. The Irish people, I believe, like re-ipsissa, truth has the reserves and its persecutors, some of the latter acting blindly and honestly. Some of them, from interested motives, earnestly hope that the friends of Irish liberty and Irish progress will not take bludgeon or resort this accidental and temporary advantage.

The Turkish Government has issued orders to have the army placed on a peace footing. The military and naval reserves are being disbanded.

A London dispatch of the 15th inst. says the Irish votes polled in the last parliamentary elections, up to that date, were: Unionists, 1,200,922; Gladstonians, 1,329,658. The conservatives and unionists estimate the final result as follows: Conservatives, 325; Liberal Unionists, 75; Gladstonians, 188; Parnellites, 86. T. P. Gill, Home-Rule M. P., left Dublin for Italy. The situation looks dark-rate. The Tories will not have a majority, and no coalition will hold together. LATER NEWS ITEMS.

Acting Secretary Fairchild has summarily dismissed a chief of division and two clerks in his office for discreditable conduct in connection with examinations for promotion, says a Washington dispatch. It seems the chief of division had been instructed to prepare examination papers for promotion in his office, and after doing so surreptitiously furnished copies of the questions to two of his clerks under him. This fact was brought to the attention of the head of the office, who made inquiry of the accused parties, and upon their denial of the truth of the charges reported them to the Acting Secretary as persons unworthy to hold position under the Government. A high official of the Treasury Department states that he is convinced this practice has been long in vogue, and that the authorities are determined to put a stop to it, so far as possible.

THREE reports from the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections upon the Dakota case were submitted to the Senate on the 16th inst. The report signed by Senators Pugh, Saulsbury, Jones, and Kenna, the Democratic members of the committee, sets forth at length the public history of the case, recognizes the transcendent importance of throwing around the Senate of the United States the highest safeguards against seating a member whose title was possibly tainted by fraud, and concludes with a recommendation that the Senate adopt the following conclusions that there is no ground for further proceedings against Mr. Pettus. The report says the committee's first act was to convene at Pierre, Dak., and there, in pursuance of the Senate's instructions to make no consideration of the merits of the case, to hear the contestant and sitting member, and report back to the Senate a report to the committee but, after diligent inquiry, it was found that no such report was made. The Senate committee had before it the testimony taken before the committee at Pierre, and upon that testimony Mr. Pettus's counsel moved to dismiss the case, on the ground that the testimony was not such as to warrant an investigation in a case involving the title of the Senate company of United States Congress the judge of the qualifications of its members, and that the claim contested involved the right of expulsion. The signers of the report, Senators Hoar and Frye, in a minority report, say that the Senate should tolerate no expulsion from the body except upon a clear case, and that it treats the subject of the personal participation of Mr. Pettus. They therefore first object to the question of the validity of his election, and, secondly, to the question of the validity of his title to a seat, in case such fraud which it alleged was committed. Fraud vitiates everything, and if the voting citizens have changed the result, the testimony should show it. The Senate, in the discharge of its duties, should not be hampered by technicalities, with the unconscious preserving for the qualification of its members, but should take the case of Fitz-John Porter. The results was achieved by a republican vote of 25 to 15. Several measures affecting the interests both of the Republican and Democratic parties were reported, among the rest a report authorizing the transportation of dutiable goods. The bank circulation redemption fund, which is now a surplus on the public debt was taken up and amended and finally passed.

The river and harbor bill occupied the entire attention of the Senate on the 17th inst. The amendment of the Committee on Commerce to the Portage Lake (Canal and Harbor Improvement Bill, which was agreed to—yeas, 35; nays, 29. The amendment was then adopted—yeas, 35; nays, 29. The amendment accepting the proviso of the House, which was agreed to. The amendment accepting the proviso of the House, which was agreed to. The amendment of the House, as amended, was then adopted—yeas, 27; nays, 26. The House then passed Senate's bill directing payment of the surplus in the Treasury to the States, which passed the Senate by 35 yeas to 16 nays. In the House, after the passage of the bill, Mr. Springer, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote. Also a warm debate the House, which resulted in setting aside the order for the consideration of such business as may be reported from the Committee on Ways and Means, and the bill was then, by strong majority, made subject being to all points of order. The Senate bill was then passed, the House substituting the Committee on Ways and Means Committee looking to the paying out of the surplus in lieu of the Senate bill. The House passed the general deficiency appropriation bill, Mr. Morrison reported the tariff bill adversely from the Ways and Means Committee.

A DAM authorizing the construction of a bridge across the St. Louis River between the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin was favorably reported to the House on the 17th inst. The Senate passed the House bill granting pensions to the soldiers and sailors of the Mexican war. In consideration the river and harbor bill the Senate adopted an item of $200,000 for the improvement of the Chicago River. The House passed the bill to extend to the Senate and extend to Jason R. Eads, his associates, or assigns for ever, the exclusive right to use that portion of the Mississippi River until recently occupied by the jetties. The railroad attorney bill was reported from the Senate Committee on Judiciary, and was passed, the substitute for the House bill for a Republican proposition. Now that the Senate has disposed of the Dakota case, it is understood that the project to file should be made to bring the Senate and House into harmony on the Dakota bill. It is believed that the Senate will accept the proposition of the House, and that the question of preference as the state to be admitted will be left to the people. It is believed that the proposition of the House will be accepted, and that the Senate will have to recede from its position. It has been required by the Treasury because there was a Democratic administration.

CONGRESSIONAL.

The Work of the Senate and House of Representatives.

MR. HOAR offered a resolution in the Senate on the 9th inst., calling on the President for information as to the seizure or detention in any foreign ports of any American vessels, the property of, or alleged citizens thereof, and also for information as to the reasons or causes for such seizure or detention. The resolution proved that Mr. Vail offered a resolution calling on the President to direct the American representative in Mexico to investigate the treatment of American citizens and vessels, and to inform the United States as to complaints in Mexico disposed without trial by the Mexican authorities in the laws of Mexico, and that the Vail resolution has been postponed without action. Many of the facts and statements are found to be true, and that American citizens and their property are subjected to such treatment. The Senate, in executive session, confirmed the nomination of John Goode, of Virginia, to be Solicitor General of the United States. The Senate Committee on Appropriations reported to the Senate the Deficiency Appropriation Bill, and a motion to recommit the bill, with a view to its early passage, was made by Senator Beck, of Kentucky, and after a long and animated debate, in the course of which the Executive was arraigned by Senators Gorman, Barrows, McCormas, and Brookline, and defended by Senators Hoar, Frye, and Sherman—the motion was lost, the President sent to the House a message vetoing the Dakota bill, on the ground that the people of that Territory had not the Federal officials at that point was without authority of law, and was therefore void.

A HOUSE bill authorizing the Chicago, Burlington and Northern Railway Company to cross Sheepy River at Dubuque, Iowa, passed the Senate on the 13th inst. The House had adopted by the Senate calling on the President for information as to the seizure of American vessels and citizens in foreign ports. The resolution elicited a long and warm debate, in which Senators Hoar, Morgan, and others took part. After a warm debate the House adopted a resolution setting aside the order for the consideration of such business as may be reported from the Committee on Ways and Means, and made the bill subject being to all points of order. The Senate bill was then passed, the House substituting the Committee on Ways and Means Committee looking to the paying out of the surplus in lieu of the Senate bill. The House passed the general deficiency appropriation bill, Mr. Morrison reported the Dakota tariff bill adversely from the Ways and Means Committee.

RUM.

Its Effect on the Duration of Human Life—Facts of Interest to the Public.

[From the Toledo Blade.]

We are glad to see that the more advanced and wide-awake members of the medical profession are turning their attention to the physiological effects of rum on the human body. By rum we mean any kind of liquor—spirituous, vinous, or malt—which contains alcohol in any quantity whatever.

There is a growing disposition among the doctors to investigate the old beliefs of the profession regarding rum's work in the human economy, to take nothing for granted because it is current as a part of old medical literature, but to put each assertion to the proof, and test, by actual experiment, its truth or falsity.

We have recently discussed the topic of rum as a medicine, and endeavored to give our readers without the use of technical or medical terms, the latest results arrived at by the investigations of English medical men, which results go to show that rum is not the blessing in the shape of a medicine that it is set up to be, and that the alcohol, and of course rum in all its forms, is a poison to the human system, and not a mere stimulant, in the medical sense, to be used as a medicine.

Within the past few days the use of alcohol (rum) in medical practice was discussed by the Ohio State Medical Society, at its annual meeting at Akron, this state—the following being the report of a paper read before the society by Dr. Wm. J. Herdman, of Cleveland, on the above question: "While the paper was for the most part strictly professional in its treatment of the subject, and hence of interest only to medical men, the general conclusions of the author, as well as we are able to judge from the brief summary before us, were in accord with those before given in our paper. There were some additional facts given, however, as to the habitual use of liquor that are of the widest interest to the public.

Most interesting was his discussion of the influence of Rum on the duration of life. Statistics were quoted to show that moderate drinking by anybody that is alcoholic is equivalent to a slow poisoning of the individual, and that a shortening of the natural term of life would be the inevitable result. This report will be found to actually so. It is found by the great insurance companies that the use of liquor shortens life. These companies have either a pecuniary interest in ascertaining the truth of this matter. To them it is not a humanitarian question, but one of dollars and cents. The report of the committee, which their employer had set before them to make up their minds upon, was, "Drinking moderately." The committee to make no conclusion, but to report the facts, and let the insurance men draw the conclusion. Upon this testimony Mr. Hoar made a report to the committee that, after carefully reading the evidence, he proposed whether we found personally acceptable or not, it was our duty to report the facts of fraud in the matter of the election. Neither did such examination, though had very frequently, we found to be certain that the election was procured by the corrupt use of money. This report will be found to be accurate. C. J. STRANG,
Secretary, Democratic County Committee.

FOR AUDITOR GENERAL.

The movement to secure for Philip H. Winchell, of Petoskey, the nomination for auditor general, should meet with the enthusiastic support of northern Michigan, and the approval of the whole state. This section is entitled to consideration in the distribution of offices, and we do not know of a man who would add more strength to the ticket, and none could bring out more effective work for the whole ticket, than would be done by Mr. Winchell's friends, in an effort to elect him to that important office. He is personally popular wherever he is known, and his past business training fits him for careful, close work in the business for the state.

The Democratic Press.

It is encouraging when a partisan press can receive just merited praise from an independent source of its position upon questions with which its party is connected. The republican press, throughout its lease upon power, was noted for its blind and persistent defence of everything republican, in the midst of the blackest crimes and excesses that be murdered its administration. The Chicago Herald notes this in connection with the Belknap, Shepard, Babcock and Robeson corruptions. "Every republican newspaper in America," it says, "defended Belknap until he confessed." The credit mobilier, whisky ring and whisky thieves, that were the chief points of interest in the Grant administration, were defended through thick and thin.

The free-lance position of the democratic press is in marked contrast with the republican in a similar position. Their private opinions upon the financial policy of the government are very publicly expressed, even though in opposition. There is nothing but a very slight appearance of evil in the Carlisle and Goodloe case. The fact is very doubtful, and yet a large portion of the democratic press is speaking right out in meeting. The honesty of intent can not fail to win its reward. The people will treat this party that has honest, outspoken representatives.—Kalamazoo Gazette.

The Surplus Must Go.

The house on Wednesday passed the following resolution which was introduced by Mr. Morrison:

Resolved, That whenever the surplus or any portion of the treasury, including amount held for redemption of United States notes, shall exceed the sum of $100,000,000, it shall be and is hereby made the duty of the secretary of the treasury, after paying expenses, to retire and less than principal and interest of the public debt, and to apply the surplus or excess, in the payment of the outstanding bonds of the United States, applying at the option of the government.

The vote on this resolution stood 207 ayes and 67 nays. Quite a large number of western republicans voted for it. Every member of the Michigan delegation except Congressman O'Donnell of Jackson, who was absent on account of sickness, supported the resolution.

The discussion which preceded the passage of the resolution through the house shows that it was urged and considered as a distinctively democratic measure. It was opposed most strenuously by leading republicans like McKinley of Ohio and Reed of Maine. Nearly all those who voted against it were republicans. A democrat introduced it only democrats advocated it; and all but 15 democrats recorded themselves in favor of its passage. It must be considered therefore as a purely democratic measure, and that party alone is entitled to the credit of the splendid victory which was achieved.

The country has again been given a practical illustration of the devotion of its national democracy to the interests of the people. Way should the wage earner or honest agriculturist hesitate any longer in deciding which party he will support in the coming contest? His he not already had abundant proof of the patriotic purposes and honest performances of the one and the false pretenses and sinister treachery of the other?—Lansing Journal.

The Treasury Surplus.

The question presented by Mr. Morrison's resolution is simply a business question. Is one hundred millions a sufficient reserve? In view of the resources of the country, we think it is.

We do not share the gloomy forebodings of Mr. Hewitt and the Herald.

The Herald has long been prophesying a woful disaster because of silver coinage. But the coinage has gone on and the disaster has deferred its visit.

The Star does not fear that the country will suffer if it shall use the money in its hands to reduce the debt. The greatest evils that can befall us come from a plethoric treasury. It gives birth to all sorts of schemes—Blair bills, Hennepin and Cape Cod canals, pensions to all men and every other form of waste. Let us use the surplus to pay the debt, and then let us reduce the taxes so that there will not soon be another surplus.

That is democratic doctrine—pay the debt and reduce the taxes.

The suggestion is made that under the resolution, bonds may be called in and silver offered in payment of them. Of course that will not be done. To tender silver dollars for the bonds would injure the public credit, and democrats have always protected and fostered the public credit.—N. Y. Star.

Mercantile Hypocrisy.

In a store. Merchant (to clerk)—"Did you send Hammerton his bill again this week?"

Clerk—"Yes, sir."

Merchant—"What did he say?"

Clerk—"Said he would be around and pay it."

Merchant—"That's what he has said for the last six months. He's the biggest liar in this town. He can never get ten cents' worth on a credit here any more. I reckon we'll have to sue him—ah—here he comes now."

Hammerton—"Good morning Mr. Hammerton, my good friend, how are you? You look well."

Merchant—"Good morning Mr. Hammerton, I'm glad to see you, sir. Won't you sit down?"

Hammerton—"No, thank you. I called to settle that bill."

Merchant—"What bill—oh, yes. Why sir, I hadn't thought of it. You see, the clerk has charge of the bills and I pay but little attention to them. Thank you." (receiving the money and receipting the bill.) "Call again, Mr. Hammerton."

Hammerton—"I am a little pinched for money at present."

Merchant—"That makes no difference, sir, none whatever. Whenever you want anything give us a call. Good-morning."—Exchange.

The President's Popularity.

Colonel John Knapp, one of the proprietors of the St. Louis Republican, for years the recognized organ of the democracy in the northwest, is at the Fifth Avenue. Colonel Knapp during the last two months has made an extensive tour of the west, and he says that everywhere he found President Cleveland popular with his party.

"As far as I am concerned," he said "I can say nothing too good about the administration. It is, however, superfluous for me to speak upon the subject, as the Republican represents my views, and I guess that is generally known that it is giving the administration a most hearty support. And in doing so the paper but reflects the sentiment of the great majority of the democracy of Missouri. It rests with himself whether Mr. Cleveland is renominated."—N. Y. Star.

Economy in the Treasury.

Washington, July 13.—A table printed in this morning's Congressional Record by Mr. Belmont, in connection with his defense of the military Morrison resolution, makes an interesting showing of the expenditures of that department for the fiscal year just closed. The expenditures for construction and repairs of public buildings, etc., increased $483,000, but the expenditures for salaries, repayments to importers, cost of detecting frauds in the customs service, interest on the public debt and other purposes, decreased $5,091,000, making a net decrease of expenditures for the department for the year 1888 as compared with 1885, of $4,600,000 in round figures.

TESTIMONIALS:

A LETTER.

LAWLESS REAL ESTATE OFFICE OF LOWLESS & CO.,
Chicago, Ill., July 17th, 1886.

H. B. CHAPMAN, Esq., Boyne City, Mich.

DEAR SIR: Knowing of your tedious suffering and having sluggishly for you would like of course you relieved of those terrible pains, I will tell you how I got rid of mine. A friend somewhat called to see me on Saturday, and finding me all my other cause to my house, and seeing the pain I was in, said she could relieve me if I were willing. Of course I was willing, for I was tired of pain almost insanity, and in two minutes time she had me so that I could walk the floor and sit in a chair, though I was so nervous that I was unable to leave my house during the whole last spell. Together with the relief from pain, my appetite and strength of the leg. All my friends know how well how I suffered, and when I now tell them that I have been cured by Sweetland's Metaphysical Bethesda and place myself in your care, they will be curious to see me. Mr. Lowless was to have one of the operations, but I found he was so nervous I did not dare that more was needed to cure me than I had got. I am now in a condition to go to the office of my firm and do a day's work. During my terrible affliction which I had been cured by several physicians, I came to cream and making it impossible for me to place it upon the floor. Mr. Sweetland, you are wonderfully, and seeing my sufferings, placed her hand upon my head and in a few minutes time the balm given at the Bethesda surpass anything I ever felt before in my life. I feel that the real work, which can be given to the most elegant parlor without danger of injury. To the most delicate and nervous lady I can recommend I have been a practitioner of medicine for my own and family's benefit, and I know of no other cure for such cases as mine.

Thanks to Mrs. Sweetland.

MRS. ANNA CRANE.

Notary Public.

Harbor, Oct. 8th, 1887.

MRS. M. J. SWEETLAND:

MADAM,—I deem it my duty to let you know of the benefit received from your treatment upon my hand. Three years ago I suffered terribly with a tumor upon the back of my hand. The headaches continued for over two years. I had the best medical advice I could get, but it was of no avail. I finally gave up all private hope the medical skill which I had spent so much money for. The tumor I was advised to try your method of treatment. I did so, and in a few days the headaches disappeared and the tumor began to come out of the hand. It came out in large pieces and with a healthy and healthy appearance. I can cheerfully recommend your treatment.

Yours, etc.,

ANNIE CRANE,
28 Jackson street.

WONDERFUL CURE OF DANCING BRONCHITIS
YEARS STANDING.

MRS. M. D. BOSSON, of No. 525 E. 88 Street, New York, Sweetland's Metaphysical Bethesda, Mrs. Sweetland's treatment, which I underwent, has proved a painful cure of her long-standing asthma. Mrs. Sweetland, by her strong magnetic or will power, gave her instant relief for the problem, and continued to do so for a month. At first she would have to sit up in bed, but at the end of it, she walk and ride with ease and have gathered fifteen pounds. The cough remained for her and the cancer reduced to a small spot, which she says cured her reputation and skill are fully necessary to be convinced.

CONSULTATION M. D. BOSTON,
Buffalo, N. Y.

Buffalo, Dec. 22, 1884.

I was suffering with severe pains in my head and spread from my neck to my shoulders and required much relief. Hearing that Mrs. Sweetland was at the Clarence house, I visited her and received one of her wonderful treatments. It has entirely removed the pain and headache. I can recommend her treatment to any lady who requires it.

MRS. ALBION ROGERS.

A WONDERFUL CURE.

Mrs. Tiernan, of Buffalo, N. Y., has been for the past two years badly afflicted with a tumor on her neck, which she was unable to remove, and which caused her to be a complete invalid. Mrs. Sweetland, of Buffalo, N. Y., hopeful that she would be able to do with the use of glasses, and she had tried upon experience without relief. Mrs. Sweetland, convinced, and visited her at her house in the city of Buffalo, and in a few days time the lady's sight and received her wonderful and health giving treatment. Mrs. McGregor, now living in Buffalo, will testify to the cure, and her friend and last trouble is rapidly disappearing. She would gladly tell the cure, and will advise all her friends, during which in her long long suffering.

Local Notes and News.

Postmaster Steele, of Advance, is down in Ingham.

Benedict & Son have a new card this week. Read it.

G. D. Dillon returned home from the east last Thursday.

Advance school will close for summer vacation on Tuesday next.

The Lansing Republican is in favor of Major Minor S. Snowell to head the republican ticket and thinks George Starr will be nominated for treasurer. Archibald Buttons for lieutenant governor and Moses Taggart for attorney general.

D. W. Comstock of Sargents Bluffs, Iowa, member of the State Alliance for the enforcement of the prohibitory liquor law of Iowa, was a passenger on the Champlain last Friday, and made the Journal a brief call while the boat discharged freight.

The young people's society of the Congregational church will serve ice creams and cake at the room near Buttlebonnes's warehouse on Bridge street recently occupied by Beugle's confectionery stand, on Wednesday, July 28th, from 3 p. m. to 9 p. m. Everybody come.

The Advance band purposes holding a grand pic nic at that place on Wednesday afternoon next and in the evening they will give an ice cream social and dance in Steele's new hall. Excellent music will be furnished and a good time may be expected. Come one and all and welcome.

At Alex Rosenthal's drawing last Thursday afternoon, A. F. Robinson's ticket, No. 522, drew the first prize, a sewing machine; Mrs. Embring's ticket, No. 301, second prize; Jacob Keller, East Jordan, No. 597, third; Dee. Brown, No. 367, fourth; Mrs. Ella Smith, No. 440, fifth; R. D. Pate, Eastport, No. 783, sixth; J. Milo Eaton, L. D. Bartholomew, and Prof. Alber acted as committee.

The steamer Remsen broke her shaft the other day, near her fishing grounds Dog river, L. S. The captain at once started in a small boat for the Sault to procure assistance. At last accounts the steamer was drifting helplessly near the scene of the accident, about 70 miles from here. A tug was sent to pick her up and bring her to this place for repairs.—Sault Democrat.

A Charlevoix correspondent of the Grand Rapids Democrat says "the better class of citizens of the county say Boyne City is the proper place for the county seat." This is a so were reduction on some good men who honestly voted the other way. It looks now, however, as though the question was not settled forever, and those "better citizens" may get left after all, though they have the supreme court of the state of Michigan to sustain them.

Mrs. Annie Aldrich, wife of Capt. A. G. Aldrich, so well known throughout this part of the State, and who has been a sufferer from sciatic rheumatism and nervous prostration attests through her sworn statement in another column of having been entirely cured by a single bath and treatment by Mrs. M. J. Sweetland, of the Metaphysical Bethesda. This with the letter from E. H. Green to H. B. Chapman, would indicate the beginning of a successful business for the institution.

Statistics are not always amusing, but often suggestive especially those of the dead letter office. 4,500,000 letters were last year sent to the dead letter office for various reasons; of which 3,500,000 were unclaimed letters, 112,959 were returned from hotels, 314,703 were mis-directed, 153,600 were held for unpaid postage, 14,134 were without address. Of these 4,044,845 were opened, 1,518,825 returned to writers, and 2,556,980 destroyed, 17,385 of the above letters contained money; 20,200, drafts; 34,400, receipts, paid notes, etc., and 85,000 contained postage stamps.

Attorney General Taggart has been inundated vigorously and pointedly by Gov. Swineford in his open letter. Mr. Taggart is not personally a vindictive man. But he so plainly and in his position has undoubtedly been influenced by political motives. He has got himself into an unpleasant predicament, for his charges against Gov. Swineford were like chaff in the opinions of the discriminating and equitable nonpartisan committee. Mr. Taggart may reply, but like the man and his whole course to this personal and political prosecution it will be weak and vacillating. Gov. Swineford invites suit against him and, it is hoped it will be brought, that righteous judgment may be meted to his persecutors.—Kalamazoo Gazette.

Boyne Falls Fishing.

BOYNE FALLS, July 11. Your correspondent has little to write about except that the fishing here is the best and easiest to be found in northern Michigan. Large and beautiful speckled trout are caught within sight of the Boyne Falls house morning and evening. We want you to say that this is the place for everybody going to Charlevoix to get off the G. R. & I. road. Six miles by stage from here brings you to Boyne City where a steamer is waiting to carry passengers down Pine Lake—the handsomest inland lake in Michigan—to the beautiful Charlevoix resort.—Telegram Herald.

Wedding Bells.

Married, in Petoskey, July 20, at the residence of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. Atkins, by Rev. Mr. Sherman, of the M. E. church, Ireland Osborn and Miss Kitty Greer.

Miss Greer will be remembered by very many of our citizens as having resigned such efficient services our age last winter in teaching our young people for and assisting in the condition of the cantata of "Lenten Lovers," and "Little Red Riding Hood," also as officiating at the organ, and wonderfully constituting the entertainment in the M. E. church in this place during her sojourn among us.

The marriage ceremony was performed at nine o'clock in the evening, at the conclusion of which the company repaired to the residence of the parents of a sumptuous repast of good cheer.

Among the wedding guests were Rev. M. Sherman and wife, Dr. Mr. Jordan and wife, of Adrian; Mr. J. H. Jordan, of Adrian; Mr. Arthur Jordan, of Adrian; Miss Hattie Jordan, of Adrian; Miss Jordan, of Grand Rapids; Mr. and Mrs. D. C. Loveday and family, at whose residence Miss Lottie Cameron, of Allegan, Miss Hattie Greer, of Grand Rapids; Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Greer, of Elmira; Mrs. L. W. Smith and daughter, of Stanton; Mr. and Mrs. Gill, of Petoskey; Mr. and Mrs. Lawton, of Petoskey; Prof. and Mrs. Ewing, of Petoskey; Mr. and Mrs. Gunison, of Petoskey; Mr. and Mrs. Ott, of Petoskey; Mr. and Mrs. Gill, of Petoskey; Mr. and Mrs. Lawton, of Petoskey; Prof. and Mrs. Greer, of Petoskey; Mr. and Mrs. Gunison, of Petoskey; Mr. and Mrs. Ott, of Petoskey; Mr. and Mrs. Dunsbergar, of Petoskey; Miss Horner, of Petoskey; and others.

After supper the company passed a few hours in social conversation interspersed with very fine music both vocal and instrumental.

The happy couple will have the best wishes of a host of friends in Charlevoix.

THE WAY WE DID IT.

BY WILLIAM BAUSTINE.

We made our home as bright and fair
As willing hands and skillful brains,
A home of comfort, love and peace,
And many a happy hour was there.
When Maggie came to take it
And such a spot where love might dwell,
And loyal hearts protect it well.

But, oh! the sunlight and the song
The incense of joy that filled it,
The love that made its life so strong,
And shed sweet cheer all day long
Was one dear life that filled it!
Sweet angel by the hearth was she,
Who gave her girlhood love to me.

The shadows fell, as fall they must;
The tempest raved around us—
Full many a bear lay in the dust,
And yet our faith leaked up in trust
To Him whose blessing found us—
We shut the door in sorrow's face
And kept it for the inner place.

We called our troubles kinder names,
And put them in love's keeping—
We found, but laughed at pleasure's claims,
At fortune, scorn of fickle shames,
And blessed away our weeping—
Our faith, our love, our hopes, our heart,
Each seeking most the heavier part.

Some day the Master's voice will call,
And one of us must bear it—
Perhaps the lonely, desolate pall,
Maybe, we will not care it all—
We will, but remember it
For parted hands again will press,
The hands they love, in blessedness,
Yonder, with us.

THE TRAIN-WRECKERS.

BY CAPTAIN JAMES MONTFORD.

"During the winter of 1861-2 a continual warfare was kept up in Missouri with the guerrilla bands.

"They are the most terrible pests of a country, even when anxious to defend it, and the ordinary guerrilla is a friend to no one but himself.

"I was then out upon the chase, and several fierce skirmishes took place. A band of guerrillas had taken possession of the Missouri railroad, and burned the bridges, tore up the rails, and brought about a desolation that half a dozen battles would not have caused.

"I met with an adventure at this time which evidences the bloody and ruthless character of these outlaws.

"I think it was about the last of December that I started from the command for a small station some twenty miles distant.

"I had business with a gentleman in the village, and rode across the country, intending to have my horse—I owned a good one at the time—with my acquaintance, and return with the supply train, which was expected at that time.

"The day was as bad a one as I could have well chosen; the bleak air swept over prairies, chilling horse and man to the very bone.

"I should have waited for a fairer day; but the train was expected up in the morning, I was anxious to go, and had already been delayed several days.

"So I started early, and rode along cheerfully enough for the first five miles, when a genuine Western storm arose, and began to rag with the fury that is only witnessed in those treeless districts.

"I was soon soaked through to the skin, the rain beat upon my face fiercely, and I wished myself back at camp, or anywhere else out of the storm.

"I believe we were five hours traveling the succeeding five miles, and at the end of that time I was nearly frozen.

"The fear of losing my way added still more to my distress, for there were no fences or other landmarks, and the ground was being fast covered by the beating snow, which succeeded the rain.

"My clothing was frozen stiff, and the neck and breast of my horse was covered with sheets of frozen breath, and blood which had oozed from his swollen nostrils.

"I must find shelter, I thought, or perish in this most horrible manner.

"Suddenly I noticed smoke arising in the distance. No house was visible, and it has seemed remarkable to me that I observed the smoke; a fortunate chance was the cause, perhaps.

"My horse was to be seen, the place was in the hollow of the prairie, and I rode within twenty rods of the door ere I saw the way.

"Getting off the saddle with difficulty, my limbs had become stiffened with cold, I was about to approach the house, when it occurred to me that it would be as well to reconnoitre a little.

"A band of outlaws might be harboring there, and then I would wish myself outside again, cold as it was.

"Speaking kindly to the horse, who stretched his nose against me for warmth, I fastened the bridle to a shrub and stole cautiously toward the house.

"Making a circuit, I approached from the back of the building. It was a poor affair, the imitation of a prairie farmer, evidently; but there was shelter for man and beast.

"As I came up the door at the side opened. I had but time to escape around the corner when three men leaped out.

"They were rough looking fellows, scarcely clad, and I at once concluded to give them a wide berth.

"With some imprecations at the weather, they hurried to the stable, which fronted the road.

"When they reappeared it was upon fleet-looking horses, and they then rode away toward the north.

"I watched them out of sight, and then approached the cabin again. Listening, I could hear no one, and conceived that the place was unguarded.

"I resolved to take advantage of the shelter, and hastening back to my poor horse I soon left him munching hay in the little stable, and myself hurried out to the house.

"I was nearly ready to drop with fatigue and cold, and, waiting for no ceremony, I opened the door and entered.

"A fire was burning on one side of the poorly furnished apartment, and hurrying forward I spread out my person to the blaze.

"I had seen no one as yet, but a voice seemed from a back room inquire about later.

"'Is that you, Carl?' asked a woman's voice.

"I explained that I was a traveler, nearly frozen, and had taken the liberty to enter the house, as I was no one about.

"A tall, wrinkled old woman, with a very erect carriage, came in from the kitchen.

"She looked at me searchingly, as I made my case, and I thought a sad expression appeared upon her face. What could it mean, or was I mistaken?

"I decided that the latter was the case, and lying back in the hard chair, I enjoyed the fire as a man only can when he has been chilled through to the bone.

"My musing was broken by the sound of voices outside; men were approaching the house. The old woman seemed to shrink with fear as she heard the sound.

"Rising to my feet, expecting some distaster, I placed my hand upon my pistol and waited.

"The door opened, and twenty men, I counted them as they came in singly, filed into the room.

"They were all armed with rifles, and an entire arsenal of small arms, and I knew I was in the presence of a band of guerrillas.

"There was no help for it, however, the men had seen my horse, and doubtless knew my character.

"'Put up your shooter and surrender,' said a tall, red-headed man, who seemed the leader. 'You don't be here 2 long as you remain quiet.'

"'What are you?' I returned with as much resolution as I could summon up. 'It would not be policy to surrender until I know to whom I—'

"A loud laugh from the entire crowd cut off my speech.

"'That's a good one,' said the tall individual. 'Twas just lucky you down kinder easy 'cause you cum into my place unawares. We can kill you easy enough, if you insist upon it.

"'I did not. Resistance would be the last thing I should attempt against such overpowering numbers.

"I handed over my weapons to the leader, and he ordered two of the gang to take me into the back room, and with them I conferred together.

"I passed nearly an hour in the back room, listening to the talk going forward in front. From the broken words I could be pieced out the following:

"'The supply train, the 10th to-morrow, was to pass this afternoon, and the outlaws were planning its destruction.

"'The track was nearly a mile from the house, and the leader concluded to go at last. He ordered the room where I sat, and ordered the guards to watch me closely.

"'One of them pleaded very strongly to go upon the expedition that the leader authorized, and when he came left I was alone with the old woman and the single robber.

"My only fears and doubts had been swallowed up by the more important news I had received regarding the train.

"It was quite valuable, besides being much required by the troops at the time. There were several officers on board, also, and their capture or death would be a great loss.

"To shorten a long story, I had a flask of liquor in my pocket; the outlaw had a larger in his own possession, and he also had an appetite for a larger quantity than was obtainable.

"He drank up the liquor in his own flask in a very few minutes, and my own followed immediately afterward.

"As might have been expected, the cold and the liquor threw him in a drunken stupor. I now decided to leave the house at any risk.

"The old woman had remained in the front room. Softly I put on my coat and his weapons. I had been left unbound, and I crept to my own apartment, preparatory to secure the fellow without awakening him. I then entered the front room and prevailed with the old lady to allow me to remain here in the same spot.

"Five minutes later I had mounted my horse, and we riding at break-neck speed toward the railroad track.

"I heard the cuckoo shriek shrilly as I left the stable, and knew the probabilities were against my reaching the spot in time to do any good.

"I rode with the speed of the wind over the snow-covered ground, and some half-twice of the track just as the train hobbled.

"Dashing the steed full, I leaped at the cars; they were already in the possession of the Outlaws.

"A couple of the men had gone up the track with a red flag, and had halted the train—in an ambush of their fellows.

"They jumped on board, with shouts and screams of triumph, while the bullets rattled merrily.

"Disappointed that I had not been a few minutes earlier, I watched the rascals.

"The soldiers upon the train were soon all dead or prisoners, and then the outlaws left the cars.

"Standing together in a body, they consulted for a moment, and then the train was unemployed, two men leaped upon it and rode back to the station.

"I watched them with bated breath. What did they intend to do? It was soon explained.

"The locomotive was stopped again a few rods away, then it was turned off the track, and the engine rushed back upon the train with the speed of the avalanche.

"A moment, and it collided with the foremost car, plowed its way through, and soon the valuable supply train was but a mass of smoking ruins.

The Colonel stopped and drew a long breath.

"I tell you it was a thrilling sight," he said, after a moment; "but the guerrillas soon paid for the damage.

"I escaped without difficulty, and reached camp again that night. The following week witnessed the destruction of that band of bushwhackers, for the outlaws were maddened by the loss of their supplies, and sought out a moment until they revenged it."

Friendly Advice to the President.

HYDE PARK, WIS., June 3, 1886.

The Hon. Grover Cleveland, President, Washington, D. C.—MY DEAR SIR: You have now assumed a new duty and taken upon your self an additional responsibility. Not content with the great responsibility of your office, sufficient to crush any other pachyderm, you have cheerfully and almost gleefully become a married man. While I cannot agree with you politically, Grover, I am forced to admire your courage.

This morning a new life opens unto you and the life of a married man. It is indeed a humiliating situation. To be a President of the United States, the combined of a few people, is a trying situation; but to be a newly married Pre-Sident, married in the full glare of official life, with the eye of a divid of constituency upon you, is to place yourself where nerve is absolutely essential.

I, too, am married, but not under such trying circumstances. Others have been married and still lived, but I has no maimest for you, Mr. President, young as you are, to pass as a newly wedded Pre-dent and to take your new mu-her-in-law into the cabinet with you. For this need you not be afraid. Let her be to walk a slack rope across the mouth lines of Congress, and a nervous man in a wheelbarrow shaks like a mere commonplace. Dandel playing "tag" with a deaf of hair-colored lions between as lustrous cipher, and the Hebrew children, sitting on a rosy bed of red-hot clinkers in the fiery furnace, are almost forgotten.

With a large nad of civil service wedged in among your back teeth, a larger fragment, perhaps, then you were prepared to masticate when you bit it off; with an unmixed Southern Democracy and a clamorous Northern constituency; with disappointment poorly concealed among your friends and hilarity openly expressed by your enemies; with the snarl of the vanquished Mr. Davis, who was at one time a servant of President himself, as he rolls up future majorities for your force; with a lot of abusive newspapers walking all over you every twenty-four hours, and clinking up your stalwart frame with their telegraph reputations on, I am surprised, Grover, now as between man and man, that you should have tried to add housekeeping to all this other agony. Had you been young and tender make the wings I might have understood it; but you must admit, in the quiet and sanctity of your own house, Grover, that you are no spring. You have arrived at man's estate. You have climbed the lofty ver fence which separates the Bull and Bloom and blossom and bumble-bees of innocence from the fierce light that beats upon shadowy orchards of middle life. You may stand in the field of your fame, Grover, you are entering upon a new experience. Twenty you think that because you are "president the unmoneyed peculiar to the life of a new, great and wide world and you. Do not find yourself in this manner. There have made increase mistakes. Position, wealth, and fame combined shut out the sunbeam and throw circumstances which make the married man envy the spotted ones prone to fly upward.

It will seem odd, Grover, at first, Mr. President, after the affairs of the nation have been put aside for the day and the tired mind lies great sofa looked up for the night, to go home to your landlady and come with a bride with one corner of her mouth full of pins. A man may write a pretty fair message to Congress, one that will be accepted and printed all over the country, and yet he may not be fitted to hold a conversation with one corner of a woman's mouth while the other is filled with pins. To some men it is given to be great as statesmen, while to others it is given to be finest conversationists under these circumstances.

Mr. President, I hate to bring a gloomy picture to you and interfere upon your private affairs, but I noticed that everybody else was doing it, and so I have moved myself up to write to you. Some ones been a married man myself, though not, as I said, under the same circumstances. When I was married I was only a plain private of the press, plodding along and striving to do my duty. You was the sheriff of your county. Little did we think in those days that one year would be a freshly married President, and I the editor of several pieces which have been printed in the papers. Little did we think then, when I was a jin fice, of the paper in which I was then a compositor, and striving to do my duty, and striving to do my duty, I was then sheriff of your county. Little do we think in those days that now you could be President and I could be the author of several pieces which have been printed in the papers. Little did we think then, when I was a jin fice of the paper in which I was then a compositor, that to-day your humility lays would be found in the front rank of literary constituents, while I would be known and hoved over by the English language as unspoiled writ.

So we have risen together, you to point from which you may be easily observed by the world, and I to be a newspaper man in the same pleasant, unassuming, gentlemanly fiend of the people that I was when I was a jin fice of the paper in which I was then a compositor.

I cannot close this letter without expressing a wish that your married life may be a joyous one, as the paper at Lorraine said, "and that no cloud may ever come to your domestic firmament and darken your life." This sentence is not my own. I copy it verbatim from a wedding notice of a letter written by a Western journalist who is now at the Old Woman's House.)

Mr. President, I hope you will not feel that I have been too forward in writing to you personally over my own name. I mean to do what is best for you. You can truly say that all I have ever done for you has been for your good. I speak in a plain way sometimes, I did last fall when I was busin. I see that you do not want to have your personal affairs sent to you for a week of weeks.

That's the way I was, I call all my creditors to withhold their engagement bills until I can see somebody, as I am engaged. This remark made me a great many friends and added three new names of creditors. It was afterward printed in a foreign paper and was explained in a supplement of eight pages.

We are all pretty well here. I think I will go to Washington this fall if I can sell a block of stock in the Tanners Dream, a new lead mine in Lake Co., Ill. It promises. It is a very rich claim, but needs capital to develop it. (This remark is not original. I took it from an exchange.)

If I do come over to Washington, do not let that make any difference in your plans. I'll naught you off—will send out to the neighbors and borrow dishes and such things on my sec—ut I'll wo-ld not go a step.

Remember that I have not grown cold toward you just because you have married. You will find me the kind of a friend who will not desert you just when you are in trouble. Yours, as heretofore,

HIRAM J. BIG BEAR, NYE.

P. S.—I send you to-day a cord-receiver. It looks like silver. Do not let your wife bear on too hard when she polishes it. I have found you right up to the top of my living house without a cord-receiver, so I send you one. Don't let it get out and get red I forgot to buy a cord-receiver, and I guess we would have frozen to death before we could have purchased one, but friends came in just in the thoughtful, and brought one of them among the gifts. If you dedicate that a world not be proper for you to receive it, I will be happy to return the receiver to me or put it in the cellar—we will I come over over there that I. H. N.

Light Two Miles Under Water.

In the Lake of Geneva Messrs. Fol and Sarasin found sufficient light to affect very sensitive photographic plates at about five hundred and fifty feet below the surface. It was found that the equal at mid-day to that at the surface on a clear cloudless night. In the Mediterranean during bright sunlight the last trace of light was lost at a depth of 1,200 feet. But an examination of the eyes of certain cuttlefish showed that, to judge from the abnormal retinas, they should have been able to see at a depth of 2,000 feet. Yet on examination of the eyes of cuttlefish showed that they could see at a depth of 2,000

Our Appeal to the Young.

BY W. JENNINGS DEMOREST.

Of the many and devious paths that are open to youthful feet, none are so dangerous as the temptation to alcoholic drink; wine, beer, or cider, whiskey, brandy or gin, and a numerous and long list of names that are applied to the various kinds of stimulating drink, all containing more or less poison—poison for the stomach, poison for the brain, poison for the body, poison for the mind, poison for to-day, poison lasting through to-morrow, and poison that will hand our hopes for all eternity. Poison for ourselves, poison for our homes, poison for our country, and every department of life, every stage of progress and all our interest, both for the present and the future, are blighted and blasted by this hideous consuming curse of ruin. And the most responsible parties are those who offer the allurements—the manufacturer, whether this be in a gilded saloon or in one of the lowest dens of our city.

If this liquor traffic is annihilated by a majority of your votes, if run quietly to earthward, and to sell intoxicating liquor is made a crime, and the people combine to enforce such provisions of law, this will banish the traffic off out of the city and all over the country, then we shall raise our voices with a grand hallelujah of praise and thanksgiving; our country will be redeemed from one of the vilest and most debasing scourges that might have brought down on our heads the vials of God's wrath; but we expect to hail the glad day when the rum power shall be overthrown, and the chains of the millionaire will prove a cloud of mercy to shower blessings on our glorious country.

The history of our lives should be the possibility of being tempted to take the intoxicating cup; if we do not take the first glass, there is but little danger that we will be moderate drinkers, and if we are not moderate drinkers, we are perfectly sure that we are safe from the drunkard's doom. Therefore the only safe and sure guarantee of our freedom from this awful curse of a craving appetite for alcoholic liquor is, "Touch not, taste not, handle not, for at last it bitets like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder." A few more fleeting years, and all our boys and most likely our girls too, will be privileged to cast their ballots for those who will have the making and executing the laws. In this country we are all sovereigns, and it depends on you to say whether the rum power shall rule the land or whether prohibition of the liquor traffic shall be our grand ambition.—From Demorest's Monthly for July.

Beer and Disease.

In the last quarterly report of the Washingtonian Home at Boston, Mass., Dr. Day, the superintendent, says—"Out of the one hundred and sixty-five new cases admitted thirty-four had delirium tremens. The annual report of patients each year brings a large number of cases of diseases of the kidneys. Formerly not over one in six cases which came under treatment had disease of the kidneys. Now one in every three bits his affection, which I believe to be owing to the great increase in the use of beer. Many of these cases try to substitute beer for stronger spirits, and in this way ruin the kidneys so quite. Those who have used beer for years always have diseased kidneys. I am confident that planes of insanity were more common in the days which came for treatment during the last four years. My experience sustains the views of Dr. Crothers and others that inebriety is increasing, and the insane types of inebriety are also increasing. This, I believe is due in part to beer-drinking and increased nervousness. Nothing can be done practically, until society recognizes the physical nature of inebriety; then its cure and prevention may be expected."

Almost a Hint.

A Texas merchant is the father of several marriageable daughters. In fact they have been marriageable for a number of years. Not long since one of his clerks left his employment.

"You are a most excellent young man, and enjoy my perfect confidence. I would like to present you with something to remind you of me during the rest of your life," said the merchant.

"I'll be only too glad to take anything you may have to offer," replied the clerk.

"I am rejoiced to hear that. Take your pick of my daughters. You need a good wife."

The clerk took—his leave.

A Novel Dance.

Each village in the Black forest has its differences in dress, besides which there is a difference in the local amusements and sports. We witnessed what is known as "the cock dance." It was going on in a barn, and our obliging driver told us of it. We were the only strangers in a group of some thirty peasants. A glass full of water was hung from the rafters at a considerable height above the floor, and after executing a figure which brought a dancing couple directly under this glass, the girl bent her knees, rested her open hands on them in such a way that her partner could step on them, then she did her best to lift him high enough to kick the glass.—Cor. San Francisco Chronicle.

Averse to Improved Machinery.

United States Consul Smith at Carthagena, United States of Colombia, has sent an interesting report to the State department in regard to the harvesting and hulling of rice in that country. He has illustrated his report by two drawings which shows the manner of the country first engaged in pounding the hulls of the rice in mortars and then winnowing it in the open air. He says that while the improved machinery now in use in the United States has been tried there, it has always been pronounced a failure and they have gone back to the primitive way. He suggests, that if the manufacturers of rice machinery, or those interested in the rice product, would send experts there to teach the natives the new methods, a great deal of good might result to all concerned. He feels certain that many thousands of dollars' worth of machinery might be sold.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Boyne City.

The board of supervisors meet at Boyne Falls Friday.

The frequent showers lately will prove very beneficial to the late planted potatoes and other crops.

Mr. Mills is making much needed improvements on the school here, of which we will say more at a future period.

Considerable shipping is going on from this place at present, about three vessels being loaded weekly with tanbark, wood, and lumber.

Mrs. T. Kane has gone on a visit to her daughter, Mrs. J. W. Mans, of Fenton, Ont. She was accompanied by her son Master "Carl" Kane.

Bootblacker Cook sent one of his Clinker row boats to Charlevoix on Wednesday by the Clara Belle. We did not learn who the purchaser was.

Quite a number from here attended the school picnic at Advance Wednesday afternoon, but still more attended the dance and festival in the evening, many of whom got—wet.

A new wagon and blacksmith shop is in the course of erection on Main street. Various other new buildings in different parts of town are also in the course of construction.

Trout fishing is now at its best in Boyne river and disciples of Izaak Walton have been enjoying good sport during the past week with rod and line. Probably the most successful was Walt Ware, who caught 14 of the speckled beauties that turned the scale at 8 pounds. Another individual boasts of having taken one mess using 15 messes in length.

The Clara Belle will run an excursion from here to Bay View on Sunday next, leaving here at 6 a. m., and returning will leave Bay View at 4 p. m. This will give all an opportunity of attending the camp meeting and of enjoying an invigorating ride on the waters of the turbulent lake Michigan, a change from our own placid and picturesque Pine lake.

Dr. Ferguson, at the Walhron house, Bay Springs, on Tuesday evening was well attended—about seventy five ladies being in attendance. A very pleasant time was spent, the gathering not breaking up till the wee small hours of the morning. The Clara Belle brought an excursion of about two dozen persons from Charlevoix, the North Star also brought a respectable number from East Jordan and intervening points.

The Friant's excursion to Bay Springs Tuesday was well patronized by roarters and others from Charlevoix. A number availed themselves of the opportunity to visit the county seat and while away a few hours in our natural park, which is so picturesquely situated on the banks of the Boyne river. Others again spent the day fishing, rowing, etc., while the young people of Friant's party had a grand added enchantment to all around.

It is pretty tuff when a "feller" has to row six miles of a night to accomodate his best girl, after lolling tuckered all day, but he has been the fate of a Boyne City hero. While returning home the other morning, a short time before the rocks crew, and evidently after having popped, and been—well we don't exactly say what, but here is what we overheard him getting off:

"This world's a fraud
And all things prove it,
I can't find out why
Before I leave it."

Probably the poor fellow had been accepted and mourned that he had put his foot in it, or was it the other way—rejected and broken hearted.

Bargeo.

Fred Sweetbun has 12 acres of potatoes. They look well.

We had a much needed rain last Saturday, but not enough of it.

People are busy harvesting their winter wheat, and it is medium crop.

Mrs. Leeds and family of Louisville, Ky. are visiting at her father's Mr. Josiah Gibson.

Some people are easily mistaken this dry weather about rain, especially when under a tramway.

Mr. Ben Lewis and family have gone to Cleveland, Ohio, they intend to make that place their future home.

There will be a grange of Lumberjacks held at the Gibson school house Monday, Aug. 23, at 2 p. m. to elect delegates to county convention, by order of committee.

Barnard.

Come at last—rain. Welcome.

Mrs. J. Jones expects to return to her home in Canada this week.

Mrs. John Shupton is expected home from Canada this week.

Ella Thorp has been quite ill for the past two weeks. She is attended by Dr. Kanagy, of Banks, and is slowly recovering.

Mr. Avery has his pea weeders around the neighborhood again.

Will Burns has commenced work on his new house. We think Will means business.

School Report.

Those who did not whisper during the entire term are Edith Adams, Hattie Anderson, Alzada Bigelow, Henry Bigelow, Sarah Bigelow, Gordon Bennett, Elisha Geer, Louie Johnson, Julia Newman, George Perce and Willie Thompson.

MAUD L. A. LOVEDAY, Teacher.

Picnic at Old Mission.

ELK RAPIDS, July 25.—The picnic at Old Mission yesterday was attended by over 2,500 people from Traverse City, this and other places around bay; the City of Traverse having 1,000 people on board, including the Traverse City band. Four hundred and twenty five people went from here and returned on the schooner Selkirk of Cleveland, which was in tow of the steamer Morley of this place. The Elk Rapids cornet band was also in attendance. A delightful day was spent, and no accidents occurred.

Clipped From Exchanges.

Elk Rapids Progress: Winter wheat harvesting commenced slightly in some parts of Grand Traverse and Antrim counties last week and will be in full blast this week. The yield and quality is said to be good. Spring wheat does not promise as well on account of the dry weather but there is a chance for this important cereal yet.... Andrew Ohman, a Swede employed at the furnace, made an unsuccessful attempt to commit suicide by drowning into last Friday afternoon.... Antrim county contains thousands of acres of the finest farming land, no malarial diseases of any extent, plenty of snow in winter to humble with ease; wood, water, and timber in delightful abundance. Forests of timber of the choicest varieties for building purposes and of any extent. Lakes and streams of the purest water, the home of the speckled trout, white fish, lock lunge, pickerel and other kinds of fish. Fruit of all kinds do well. Grand Traverse supplies are the best markets in the world. A gentleman told us in the latter part of June that he passed a farm where the potatoes were missed in this vicinity, in his travels.

Traverse Herald: Little Flossy, not yet four years old, daughter of T. Wilson, of Elmwood township, is a bright little specimen of Grand Traverse productions. She can read any page book readily, and spell words of three, four and five syllables.... A box of luscious sweet cherries, as big as cottaqples, from W. R. Miller's orchard, Miller's Hill, contains four twigs, one nine inches long with 45 cherries, one eight inches long with 32 cherries, one seven inches long with 33 cherries, and one five inches long with 31 cherries.... Hon. D. C. Leach has a strawberry bed in his garden in this village, planted in Traverse City sand, measuring about two rods of ground, from which he has gathered twelve bushels of luscious berries, and there are seemingly enough left to last a good sized family all through the summer.

Cheboygan Tribune: The wrecking tug Leviathan returned to port last Thursday afternoon. Captain Thorp was successful in recovering the machinery from the steamboiler Graves and also the steam-pump boilers, belonging to the Leviathan, that went down with the barge. He landed the recovered machinery at Milwaukee before returning to Cheboygan. The machinery of the Graves was in fair condition.

Gaylord Herald: Should this section be blessed with an abundance of rain the balance of the season, the yield of potatoes will be the largest ever known here.... One of our well known farmers, not very far distant from Gaylord, says that he will be too deaf to hear an ordinary clap of thunder, but she can hear him kiss the hired girl down two flights of stairs.

Parcly Personal.

Junius S. Dixon has returned home to remain.

Fred. Hemmings, of this office, is on the sick list. Too much exercise.

Mr. J. T. Hastings and wife are at Bay View camp meeting this week.

A. H. Henry, of Lansing, was one of the DEMOCRAT editors this week.

Mr. S. May and wife, of Columbia, Pa., are visiting at E. D. Stone's this week.

Mr. H. J. Haven, of Lansing, is in town visiting, and looking up some of his business interests here.

Frank Hines has moved into the house on Bridge street recently occupied by L. D. Bartholomew.

Mrs. Hattie Strong and children returned home on Tuesday from a two months visit with friends in Eaton and Ingham counties.

G. W. Miller went up the Jordan fishing on Monday and will return to-morrow. He was accompanied by O. W. Cole, of Chicago.

Lewis Reynolds, of Maple Rapids, formerly of the Bank of Charlevoix, is visiting some of his many Charlevoix friends this week.

Rev. Dr. Bigsby, of Mackinaw, will hold Episcopal services at the opera house Sunday morning and evening at the usual hours for service.

The Eastport band has secured the services of Bert Jarvis, of Traverse City, as band instructor, and hopes to begin to make some progress.

Kalamazoo Gazette: Supt. M. E. Wattles of the Lake Shore road, wife and daughter have gone to Petoskey and Charlevoix to be absent a week.

Mrs. Jonathan Howe and Mr. Charles Howe started on Monday for Grand Junction, Van Buren county, where they expect to reside in the future.

Mrs. Dr. Crouter and daughter Effie returned home from Dakota last Thursday, and are comfortably settled in their cottage corner Clinton and Grant streets.

L. S. Webster, of Hayes, has authority to collect subscription bills, etc., for the JOURNAL, and anyone paying him will confer a favor the same as if paid at this office.

Mr. Chauncey Harrington, a former Charlevoix boy, is now leader of the Kalkaska cornet band, and accompanied them to Charlevoix last Thursday night. Judging from the performance of the band, Clarence is a thorough instructor.

C. W. Alling, of Chicago, representing Callaghan & Co., law book publishers, spend a few days in Charlevoix last week combining business with pleasure. He took orders for about $300 worth of books to be delivered at once. He declares his intention to spend several weeks here next year, as well as to use his influence with the "head of the law" to cause here and invest in a summer cottage. He pronounces Charlevoix "the finest resort on the northern lakes."

A Cheap Kitten.

A few years ago when a Scottish parliamentary candidate was canvassing his constituency he called at the house of an aged couple. Finding the old woman alone he entered into conversation with her and asked her to use her influence in getting her husband to vote for him. While they were conversing, the would-be m. p. noticed a kitten amusing itself on the floor, and, taking it up, praised its beauty, and offered her £5 for it. The bargain was struck, and on leaving he again expressed the hope that she would secure her husband's vote for him. "Weel, sir," answered the woman, "as I said afore, John's a man o' his ain mind and just what gifts his ain mind, but at any rate, sir, you've gotten a real cheap kitten, for her opponent was in use fifty guae then yesterday and gae me £10 for its brither."

Old Weller.

Old Mr. Weller was a real person, and we knew him. He was "Old Chumley" in the flesh, and drove the stage daily from Rochester to London and back again. Once when my father was in town, the stage came to the door, the overlooking of Sir James Clark, she and I were sent up to London under the care of Old Chumley. We were just inside of our own gates, and the good-natured red-faced old fellow came regularly to the door whenever we stopped to change horses or to water them to ask the little misses if they wanted anything, or how they found themselves.—Mrs. Lynn Linton in Fortnightly Review.

A Warning.

Pain is given for the wise purpose of informing us of the presence of danger and disease. Any little excitement or unusual nature disturbs the balance of the system, the nervous energies are exhausted, and headache and a hundred other disturbances are the result. Many of the adverse of man and womankind might be cured and prevented were their approach heeded and resisted, healing their origin in derangements of the liver and blood, dyspepsia, jaundice, indigestion, costiveness, and other troublesome conditions. Evils of a disposed nature find a certain cure by the use of Golden Seal Bitters. In this medicine, nature, aided by art, has produced a rare combination of medicinal properties, wholly adapted to the cure of diseases common to mankind. The vitalizing principals embodied in Golden Seal Bitters will assuredly cure the broken down dyspeptic. Sold by Perry Weed and Dr. G. W. Crouter.

Broken Down Invalids.

Probably never in the history of Cough Medicines has any article met success equal to that which has been showered upon Dr. Pete's Pulmonal Cough cure. Thousands of hopeless cases of coughs, colds, and consumption have yielded to this truly miraculous discovery. For this reason we feel warranted in risking our reputation and money on its merits. Sold by Perry Weed and Dr. G. W. Crouter.
